Thank you

We are grateful and honored to continue our mission of developing learning materials that meet the growing demand for English textbooks in Indonesia. As English education continues to evolve, especially with recent shifts in national education priorities, this book is designed to complement Fase F and address the needs of both teachers and students in today's classroom.

This year is particularly special for us, as we have expanded our team of writers and gained deeper insights into what truly supports effective learning. We are proud to offer a book that aligns with the latest educational trends, focusing on deep learning that is mindful, meaningful, and joyful. These principles aim to foster a more engaging and enriching learning experience, one that nurtures not just knowledge, but also critical thinking and creativity.

In this edition, we aim to provide materials that are not only relevant but also inspiring, helping both students and teachers navigate the challenges and opportunities of the modern learning landscape.

Without further ado, we present this new edition with the hope that it will serve as a valuable resource on your journey toward mastering English.

Capaian Capaian Pembelajaran Bahasa Inggris Fase F

Pada akhir Fase F, peserta didik menggunakan teks lisan, tulisan dan visual dalam berbagai jenis teks dengan berbagai macam topik kontekstual untuk berkomunikasi sesuai dengan situasi, tujuan, dan target pemirsa/pembacanya. Peserta didik memproduksi teks lisan, tulisan dan visual dalam bahasa Inggris yang terstruktur dengan kosakata yang lebih beragam untuk berdiskusi dan menyampaikan keinginan/perasaan/pendapat. Peserta didik memahami teks lisan, tulisan, dan visual untuk mempelajari sesuatu/mendapatkan informasi dan untuk hiburan. Pemahaman mereka terhadap teks semakin mendalam. Keterampilan inferensi tersirat ketika memahami informasi, dan kemampuan evaluasi berbagai jenis teks dalam bahasa Inggris sudah berkembang.

Elemen Listening-Speaking
Students use English to communicate with teachers, peers, and others in a range of settings and for a range of purposes. They use and respond to open-ended questions and use strategies to initiate, sustain, and conclude conversations and discussions. They understand and identify the main ideas and relevant details in oral texts of discussions or presentations on a wide range of topics. They use English to express opinions on social issues and to discuss youth-related interests, behaviours and values across cultural contexts. They give and justify opinions, make comparisons and evaluate perspectives. They employ self-correction and self-repair strategies and use nonverbal elements (gestures, speed and/or pitch) to strengthen/support the message/information/opinion being conveyed.
Elemen Reading-Viewing
Students independently read and respond to a wide range of texts. They read to learn and read for pleasure. They locate, synthesize and evaluate specific details and gist from a range of text genres. These texts might be in the form of print or digital texts, including visual, multimodal or interactive texts. They demonstrate an understanding of the main ideas, issues or plot development in a range of texts. They identify the author's purpose and make inference to comprehend implicit information in the text.
Elemen Writing-Presenting
Students independently write an extensive range of fictional and factual (nonfiction) text types, showing an awareness of purpose and audience. They plan, write, review and revise texts with some evidence of self-correction strategies in writing conventions. They express complex ideas and use a wide range of vocabulary and verb tenses in their writing. They present information using different modes of presentation in print and digital forms to suit different audiences and to achieve different purposes.

Capaian Pembelajaran Bahasa Inggris

Tingkat Lanjut Fase F

Pada akhir Fase F tingkat lanjut, peserta didik menggunakan teks lisan, tulisan dan visual dalam bahasa Inggris untuk berkomunikasi sesuai dengan situasi, tujuan, dan target pemirsa/pembacanya dalam berbagai jenis teks narasi, eksposisi, diskusi, teks sastra, teks otentik, dan/atau multitekst dalam berbagai macam topik termasuk isu sosial dan konteks budaya.

Elemen	Capaian Pembelajaran
Listening	Students comprehend the main ideas and detailed information of complex listened-to texts on both concrete and abstract topics on events in their surroundings, current issues, or topics relevant to other subjects in the curriculum in narrative, exposition, and discussion texts.
Reading	Students comprehend the main ideas and detailed information of complex written texts, both on concrete and abstract topics, in print and on-screen or digital, single or multiple, events in their surrounding, current issues, or topics relevant to other subjects in the curriculum in narrative, exposition, and discussion texts.
Writing	Students produce texts with a clear and detailed structure of organization on different topics and express ideas or opinions on certain issues or topics in narrative, exposition, and discussion texts. The text shows strengths and weaknesses or arguments for and against different choices or opinions.
Speaking	Students interact fluently, spontaneously, and in a structured manner without hindrances to communicate orally in narrative, exposition, and discussion texts.

DESCRIPTIVE TEXT

Donnchaidh (2021) explains that descriptive essays "describe a single location, object, event, person, or place. It endeavours to engage all five of the reader's senses to evoke the sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and feel of the text's subject." You are expected to understand various descriptive texts that describe famous landmarks around the world.

A descriptive essay allows you to explain your point of view in your way. It would help if you described every aspect of the topic so that a reader can feel he has personally experienced that.

There are two main ways to write a descriptive essay:

- Personal Essay – The best way to describe an experience using your feelings and responses would be through a personal essay. This work can awaken empathy in readers, but it's important not to make any mistakes or organise poorly.
- Formal Description – Descriptive writing is a great way to show your readers what you're talking about. It resembles an argumentative essay because it has one main goal: communicating key points or describing something in detail.

What is a landmark?

According to The Britannica Dictionary (2024), a landmark is an object or structure on land that is easy to see and recognise. A landmark is primarily used to enable someone to mark their location. Usually, a landmark is the most famous building in the area. In Jakarta, for example, Monas is one landmark people use to describe Jakarta.

Stonehenge

Stonehenge in southern England ranks among the world's most iconic archaeological sites and one of its greatest enigmas. The megalithic circle on Salisbury Plain inspires awe and fascination—but also intense debate some 4,600 years after it was built by ancient Britons who left no written record.

The monument's mysterious past has spawned countless tales and theories. According to folklore, Stonehenge was created by Merlin, the wizard of Arthurian legend, who magically transported the massive stones from Ireland, where giants had assembled them. Another legend says invading Danes put the stones up, and another theory says they were the ruins of a Roman temple. Modern-day interpretations are no less colourful: some argue that Stonehenge is a spacecraft landing area for aliens, and even more say it's a giant fertility symbol.

Archaeological investigation of the site dates back to the 1660s when antiquarian John Aubrey first surveyed it. Aubrey wrongly credited Stonehenge to the much later Celts, believing it to be a religious centre presided over by Druid priests.

Centuries of fieldwork since show the monument was more than a millennium in the making, starting 5,000 years ago as a circular earthen bank and ditch. A complicated pattern of wooden posts was replaced in about 2600 B.C. by 80 dolerite bluestones from Wales that were rearranged at least three times once the larger sarsen stones were added several hundred years later. These massive sandstone blocks, weighing around 25 tons, were transported some 19 miles (30 kilometres) to create a continuous outer circle with five trilithons (pairs of uprights with a lintel on top) forming a horseshoe. It's been estimated that constructing Stonehenge took well over 20 million hours.

Every year since 2000, the UNESCO Asia-Pacific Awards for Cultural Heritage Conservation programme has recognised the efforts of private individuals and organisations in restoring, conserving, and transforming structures and buildings of heritage value in the region. By acknowledging private efforts to restore and adapt historic properties, the Awards programme encourages others to undertake conservation projects within their communities, whether independently or through public-private partnerships (PPPs) (UNESCO, 2020).

Wae Rebo

The traditional village of Wae Rebo in the district of Manggarai on the island of Flores, East Nusa Tenggara, has received the Top Award of Excellence from UNESCO in the 2012 UNESCO Asia Pacific Heritage Awards, announced in Bangkok on 27 August 2012.

Situated at around 1,100 meters above sea level and approximately 3-4 hour travel by foot from Denge Village, Wae Rebo is surrounded by panoramic mountains and the dense Todo forest. This tropical forest is rich in vegetation, where you will find orchids and different types of ferns and hear the chirping of many songbirds. There is also no mobile coverage in this village, and the electricity is only available from 6 to 10 pm. The air is relatively cold, especially in the dry season, so don't forget to bring your jacket if you're planning to visit the village.

The village's founder and, therefore, their prominent ancestor who built the town some 1,080 years ago was Empu Maro. He was a Minangkabau descendant. Today, the inhabitants are his 18th generation descendants.

Wae Rebo's main characteristics are their unique houses, which they call Mbaru Niang, which are tall and conical in shape and are completely covered in lontar thatch from their rooftop down to the ground. At one time, such houses were quite common in the region. But today, only this village continues to maintain the typical Manggarai traditional house, without which these unique houses would have been completely faded out.

The house has five levels, each level designated for a specific purpose. The first level, called lutur or tent, is the extended family's living quarters. The second level, called lobo, or attic, is set aside to store food and goods. The third level, called lentar, stores seeds for the next harvest. The fourth level, called lempa rae, is reserved for food stocks in case of drought, and the fifth and top level, called he kang kode, which is held most sacred, is to place offerings for the ancestors.

One ceremonial house is the community building where members of the entire clan gather for ceremonies and rituals. They are predominantly Catholic but still adhere to old beliefs. In this house are stored the sacred heirloom of drums and gongs.

With only a tiny population of around 44 families, the village comprises 7 houses. The villagers' staple diet is cassava and maize, but around the village, they plant coffee, vanilla, and cinnamon, which they sell in the market, located some 15 km from the village. Lately, however, Wae Rebo has grown in popularity as a tourist destination for international ecotourism enthusiasts, which has added to the economic welfare of the village. The people of Wae Rebo warmly welcome visitors who wish to see their village and experience their simple traditional life.

Burj Khalifa

In March 1996, the Petronas Towers in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, overtook the Sears Tower's record as the world's Tallest office building. Stainless steel pinnacles 73.5 metres (241 ft) long placed atop the 88-storey towers brought their height to 451.9 metres (1,482 ft 8 in). Then, in 2003, Taiwan's Taipei 101 (also known as the Taipei Financial Centre) took the title at a huge 508 metres (1,666 ft). Just one year later, construction on the Burj Khalifa began.

It was to form part of a new 2 km² flagship development called Downtown Dubai at the 'First Interchange', near Dubai's main business district in the UAE. The towering property was developed by Emaar Properties and the architects Skidmore, Owings & Merrill LLP, headed by renowned American architect Adrian Smith. Reaching a breathtaking 828 m into the sky, this new skyscraper would soon be described as a 'vertical city' and become an icon of the modern world.

All over the globe, people were asking whether it was even possible to construct a building that high – and that was when the Burj was designed to be 'just' 518 metres tall, 10 metres taller than the Taipei. It actually grew by a whopping 310 metres during the design process – approximately the height of the Eiffel Tower in France.

Construction began on 21 September 2004, with the exterior of the structure completed on 1 October 2009. The taller a building is, the greater the effects of weather, but the neo-Futurist-style Burj Khalifa was designed with a complex Y-shaped cross-section to reduce the impact of wind. The individual stalks that rise around the central spire deflect most wind around the building. Chief structural engineer Bill Baker calls it 'confusing the wind'.

Everything about the Burj is superlative and involves huge numbers: there were more than 12,000 people from all over the world who worked on the construction of the Burj Khalifa. Almost 26,000 hand-cut glass panels were used in the exterior cladding of the building, which is used for residential, office, and hotel purposes. It takes about three months to clean the structure from the top to the bottom!

The monumental edifice officially opened on 4 January 2010 and was certified as the Tallest building on the planet. "It's a very impressive building with a very unique design," said Talal Omar, Country Manager of UAE, Guinness World Records, in announcing the record.

Underwater Mysterious Circle

Several years ago, in the subtropical waters of southern Japan, divers spotted large geometric shapes sculpted in the sandy seabed. The circles were roughly two metres across and formed of two concentric rings with spokes radiating from the centre. No one could work out what or who had made these mysterious shapes.

Then, a team of scientists finally caught sight of the seabed artists in action. They saw a small male pufferfish (from the Torquigener genus), around 12cm long, darting across the sand, shimmying his fins and creating patterns in the sand. After that, more sand-sculpting puffers were spotted drawing circles on the seabed, each performing a similar series of steps.

The purpose of these shapes became clear when female pufferfish showed up and inspected these artworks. As it turned out, these shapes were nests. The circular design seemed to channel fresh water towards the middle of the nest, so no matter which way the current was flowing, fresh oxygen-rich water was swept into the central spawning area, creating ideal conditions for egg development.

If a female pufferfish likes the look of a nest, she'll lay her eggs in the middle and then swim off, leaving the hard-working male to hang around for another six days, guarding the nest and the growing eggs, while his artwork gradually crumbles and gets swept away. Every time he wants to attract another mate, he must build a new nest.

GRAMMAR SECTION

SIMPLE PRESENT, PRESENT PROGRESSIVE, PRESENT PERFECT TENSES

What to discuss

This part discusses how to use simple present, present progressive, and present perfect tenses.

The present tense is used to describe events in the present and the future.

SIMPLE PRESENT TENSE

I study every day.

She studies every day.

PRESENT PROGRESSIVE

I am studying now.

He is studying now.

PRESENT PERFECT TENSE

I have studied a lot today.

I have studied a lot today.

Exception

Some word is called NON-PROGRESSIVE verbs. Some people call them STATIVE VERBS. They describe a state rather than an action. They aren't usually used in the present continuous form (LearnEnglish, 2018).

For example:

I want to go home now. → ~~I am wanting to go home now.~~

They have a lot of apples. → ~~They are having a lot of apples.~~

To talk about the present

- The sun shines brightly.
- It is raining today. I don't want to go out.
- She has prepared a surprise party. So, act surprised!
- We have been working on the project for the last couple of weeks. At least you can appreciate it a little.

To talk about the future

- The bus leaves at 7. You need to hurry if you don't want to be late.
- I will buy you the doll when I get my first salary.
- I am having a meeting in an hour. Sorry, can I see you later?
- I will go home as soon as I have finished this work.

Task 1.9
Complete the text with the present simple form of the verbs.

User Manuals

LESSON OBJECTIVES

- To read the procedure text

GRAMMAR FEATURES

- Modal: Ability, suggestion and obligation
- Modal: deductions about present and past

READING SECTION

PROCEDURE TEXT

A procedure text is a type of text that provides instructions on how to perform a specific task or process. Its primary purpose is to guide the reader through a series of steps to achieve a desired outcome. Procedure texts are common in various contexts, such as recipes, user manuals, technical guides, and instructional documents.

Key characteristics of procedure texts are:

1. Goal or Purpose: The text usually begins by stating the goal or the final outcome the reader will achieve by following the instructions.
2. Materials or Ingredients: This section lists all the items, ingredients, or tools needed to complete the procedure.
3. Steps or Instructions: The main body consists of a sequence of steps that must be followed. These steps are usually presented chronologically and often numbered or bulleted for clarity.
4. Language Features:
 - Imperative Sentences: The instructions are often written in the imperative mood (commands), e.g., "Mix the flour and sugar."
 - Sequential Connectors: Words or phrases like "first," "next," "then," and "finally" are used to indicate the order of steps.
 - Present Tense: The instructions are generally written in the present tense.
 - Clear and Concise Language: The language is straightforward to avoid confusion.

User manuals User manuals, instruction manuals, and user guides refer to the same type of document. These documents are designed to help the end user understand how to properly use a product or service and solve any issues that might arise. They provide detailed, step-by-step instructions and troubleshooting support.

Key Points About User Manuals (Instruction Manuals or User Guides)

1. Purpose:
 - Help the user operate a product or service correctly.
 - Provide solutions to common problems that may arise.
2. Formats:
 - Available in both print and digital formats.
3. Content:
 - Detailed, step-by-step instructions.
 - Troubleshooting support for common issues.
4. Usage:
 - Not meant to be read from cover to cover.
 - Used as a reference guide.
 - Includes a table of contents for easy navigation.

Pre-reading activity

Read the manual, then do the following task.

Have you ever read a set of instructions on how to operate something? It could be how to turn on your new cellphone or game console.

A Guide to Using a Hand Mixer

STEP 1: READ INSTRUCTIONS

A good first step before using any appliance is to read the instructions or owner's manual. Especially if you are new to using a hand mixer, take a moment to learn about your particular model and its variable speeds and capabilities.

STEP 2: LEARN THE PARTS OF YOUR MIXER

Each hand mixer will be slightly different, but mixers typically have some similar components. Most hand mixers will have a power button, a button or buttons to control the speed, a power burst button and a button to release the attachments. Some hand mixers will also have a button to automatically wind the cord for practical storage.

STEP 3: IDENTIFY THE APPROPRIATE ATTACHMENT

Hand mixers come with standard beaters and might also come with other attachments, such as a whisk or dough hook. When using your hand mixer, determine which attachment will work best for your desired outcome. Always attach the accessories with the mixer turned off and unplugged.

STEP 4: SELECT THE SPEED

Hand mixers will usually have various speeds. Choose your speed based on the recipe. Start at a low speed and gradually increase until you have the hand mixer at the speed you need. To help determine the ideal beating time, observe the batter or dough and beat only until it has the desired appearance described in your recipe, such as "smooth and creamy."

STEP 5: MIX

Once you have the correct attachment connected and chosen the appropriate speed, it's time to mix. Run the mixer around the edges of the bowl and through the centre to be sure that everything is mixed well. Having a flexible spatula on hand can be useful for clearing the edges of the bowl as you mix. Be sure to switch the hand mixer off when adding ingredients to the bowl to avoid splatter.

STEP 6: POWERING DOWN

Once you are done mixing, turn the speed down to the lowest setting before powering your mixer off and unplugging it. Some hand mixers will conveniently restart at the lowest speed setting when they are powered back on, regardless of the setting they were on when they were turned off.

STEP 7: CLEANING

Hand mixers can be easily wiped down, and some have attachments that are dishwasher-safe. Once you have turned the mixer off and unplugged it, use the ejector button on the hand mixer to remove the attachments. If dishwasher-safe, place them in the top rack of your dishwasher. If you prefer to hand wash them, a little warm, soapy water is all you need. It's best to clean the attachments as soon as you're done using them to avoid stuck-on food. Clean the attachments and the hand mixer thoroughly, dry them, and put them away until it's time to create again.

How to Clean Your Tumbler

1. Take the whole thing apart.

Break your tumbler down into as many pieces as possible before you start washing. That includes disassembling any rubber seals and exterior protection as well.

2. Use warm water and dish soap.

Always use hot, soapy water to clean. While some people may use cold water to save money, warm water actually makes dish detergent more effective at cutting through oil, bacteria, and, yes, mould.

3. Get into hard-to-reach places.

A haphazard swipe around the inside of your cup isn't going to get the job done. You'll need to thoroughly clean out every nook and cranny of the different parts. Use pipe cleaners or Q-tips if necessary.

4. Dry all of the pieces thoroughly before you reassemble them.

You could have the most sparkling clean tumbler imaginable, but if you don't dry the parts before putting it back together, you'll end up with a mouldy mess in no time. Let the pieces dry completely overnight or thoroughly towel-dry them, making sure there's no excess water hiding in the creases of the seal.

Pre-reading activity

A Recipe is a bit different from a manual. A manual is used for a piece of equipment known to the readers. However, a recipe contains some ingredients that are probably unknown to the users. Below are parts of a recipe based on Stradley & Brenda (2015).

What is a Recipe?

A recipe is a set of instructions used for preparing and producing a certain food, dish, or drink. The purpose of a recipe is to have a precise record of the ingredients used, the amounts needed, and the way they are combined.

- (1) The recipe name tells you what you will be making. Sometimes, the author will include personal information about the recipe.
- (2) There are three components to a recipe. The first is the list of ingredients, and the second is the amount of the ingredients. The third is the preparation instructions.
- (3) A well-written recipe will list all ingredients in the order they will be added in the preparation instructions. Most well-written recipes will spell out pan size, cooking temperature, and how much of each ingredient to use. However, you will find some poorly written recipes that use abbreviations.

- (4) Some recipes will include variations of the recipe and instructions on how to store your prepared dish.

Read the recipe, then let's learn the structure of a recipe.

Dalgona Coffee

🕒 8 min

👨‍🍳 easy

✂️ no cook

Ingredients

3 tbsp instant coffee
2 tbsp sugar
400-500ml milk

Method

Step 1

Whisk the coffee, sugar and 3 tbsp boiling water in a bowl for approximately 5 mins until the mixture is thick and fluffy with stiff peaks. This is easiest done using an electric whisk but can be done by hand.

Step 2

For hot coffee, heat the milk and pour it into two heat-proof glasses. For cold coffee, pour the cold milk into two glasses. Divide the coffee mixture in half and spoon evenly on top of the glasses. Serve and stir thoroughly before drinking.

Pre-reading activity

Procedure text is also available in the form of instruction guides.

Instruction guides are detailed documents that provide step-by-step instructions on how to perform specific tasks or use certain products. They are designed to help users understand and complete activities efficiently and accurately, ensuring proper usage and troubleshooting when necessary.

The purposes of instruction guides are:

- To provide clear, detailed instructions for performing tasks or using products.
- To ensure users can follow procedures correctly and safely.
- To assist with troubleshooting common issues.

Pomodoro Technique

The Pomodoro Technique is a time management method that has been proven to boost productivity and improve study habits. Developed by Francesco Cirillo in the late 1980s, the technique is named after the Italian word for tomato. Cirillo used a tomato-shaped kitchen timer to track his work intervals, and the name “Pomodoro” has stuck ever since.

Choosing Time Intervals

Finding the best time intervals that work for you is crucial for using the Pomodoro Technique effectively. Here are a couple of suggestions:

- Desk time Study: Suggests 52-minute work intervals followed by 17-minute breaks.
- Ultradian Rhythms: Suggests 90-minute work intervals followed by 20-30 minute breaks.

Using the Pomodoro Technique

Once you've chosen your time intervals and prepared a tool to track the time, you can use the Pomodoro Technique to enhance your productivity and study sessions:

1. Prioritize Your Task List: Break your tasks into Pomodoro sessions (also called Pomodoros).
2. Minimize Distractions: Be mindful of distractions and try to eliminate them as much as possible.
3. Set Your Timer: Set your timer for 25 minutes (or the time interval you have chosen).
4. Work on One Task: Start studying or working, focusing on one task during each Pomodoro.
5. Take a Short Break: When your timer goes off, take a 5-minute break (or the time interval you have chosen).
6. Repeat and Rest: Repeat for 3-4 Pomodoro sessions, and then take a longer break of 20-30 minutes.

By following these steps, you can take your productivity and study sessions to the next level using the Pomodoro Technique.

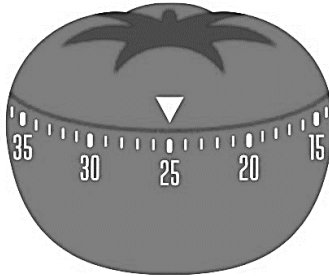

How to do your first Pomodoro

Get into optimal work space without distractions.

Choose ONE task to focus on.

3

Set your timer for 25 minutes.

STOP when the timer ends.

Take a 5-minute break.

Repeat 3 times.

8

Take a longer break (30 minutes).

Excerpted from StudySmarter (2024)

Task 2.7 Answer the questions based on the information found in the text.

1. The text recommends different intervals to do the Pomodoro technique. What is the interval suitable for you? Please explain why you think it is a suitable setting for you.

2. In your opinion, is it possible to apply the Pomodoro technique to enhance your study? What would be the hardest problem in implementing the Pomodoro technique?

3. Do you believe that the Pomodoro technique is useful for improving your study habits? Why or why not?

MODALS TO SHOW ABILITY, SUGGESTION, AND OBLIGATION

What to discuss	This chapter discusses modal in two contexts: (1) to show ability, suggestion, and obligation, and (2) to deduct present and past occurrences.
Ability	The modal verb can express whether the subject of a sentence is able to do something. Likewise, the negative form, cannot or can't, shows that the subject is unable to do something. E.g. • I know you are busy at work. But we can go swimming on Sunday, though. • I can edit videos for great IG posts. I can help you if you want.
Suggestion	What if you want to recommend a course of action but not command it? If you're giving suggestions or advice without ordering someone around, you can use the modal verb should. E.g. • If you have trouble doing your assignment, you should come to me. I will help you with it. • I don't really understand this part. I think we should ask the teacher about it.
Obligation	Modal verbs can express a necessary action, such as an obligation, duty, or requirement. Likewise, the negative forms express that an action is not necessary. Use the same modal verbs as with commands: must and have to. E.g. • You must not tell a lie. • You must wear a proper uniform to school.

Task 2.9
Fill in the blank with appropriate modal verbs. Use can, should, have to or must. Use negative form if necessary.

1. The baby is sleeping. You _____ be quiet.
2. We _____ hurry if we are to get there on time.
3. That guy _____ wear less cologne. I _____ smell him from here. And honestly, it does not smell nice at all.
4. You _____ lead a horse to water, but you _____ make it drink.
5. We _____ wait for our boss to arrive before we open. He holds the key to the meeting room.
6. You _____ wash your hands before cooking.
7. She _____ speak three languages, but none of them well.
8. I _____ see the doctor about my leg. I feel it throbbing at night.
9. You _____ try the lasagna. They are the best.
10. They _____ dance very well. But I admire their confidence.

Task 2.10
Fill in the blanks with "can," "must," or "should". Use negative form if necessary.

1. You ____ drink water regularly to stay hydrated. However, you ____ drink soda all the time. It is unhealthy.
2. Students ____ bring their textbooks to class. They ____ also bring a notebook.
3. We ____ finish this project by Friday. Nevertheless, we ____ ask for an extension if needed. Do you think we need an extension?
4. You ____ see the doctor if you feel unwell. You ____ ignore your symptoms. It's better to be safe than sorry.
5. He ____ play the piano beautifully. And in order to do this, he ____ practices every day to maintain his skills. Practice regularly is a must, even for a professional player.
6. You ____ lock the door when you leave. You ____ also check if the windows are closed.
7. They ____ wear safety gear on the construction site. They ____ skip the safety briefing.
8. You ____ follow the recipe closely for the best results. You ____ experiment with different spices if you like.

9. We ____ arrive early for the concert. We ____ miss the opening act.
They say it will be unforgettably amazing.
10. She ____ complete her assignments on time. She ____ ask the teacher if she has questions.
11. You ____ pay attention during the class. You ____ use your phone unless it's an emergency.
12. He ____ go to bed early to get enough rest. He ____ stay up late only on weekends.
13. They ____ use public transportation to reduce their carbon footprint.
They ____ drive only if it's more convenient.
14. You ____ respect other people's opinions, but you ____ agree with everything they say.
15. We ____ save money for emergencies. We ____ spend all our savings on non-essential items.

Task 2.11
Study these situations and develop a response. Use can, should, or must in your answer.

1. There are five people in our group, and we have a lot to do to finish the assignment.

2. I need to make an omelette for breakfast, but I don't have any eggs.

3. I want to make some French toast, but I don't know how to make it.

4. Albert and Andy are roommates. They keep fighting about who cleans the room.

5. Albert and Andy are new students. They are confused about the rules in their new school.

Modals to deduct present and past occurrences

Modal verbs are used to make deductions or conclusions about both present and past events or situations. In the present tense, modal verbs such as "must," "might," "may," "could," and "can't" are commonly used for deductions. These verbs help us draw conclusions based on known facts or evidence in the current moment.

For example: "She is not answering her phone. She must be busy."

In the past tense, modal verbs like "must have," "might have," and "could have" are used to make deductions about past events or situations. These verbs indicate our conclusions based on evidence or information from the past.

For example: "The road was wet. It must have rained earlier."

The choice of modal verb in each category reflects the level of certainty or probability in the deduction. In the present tense, modal verbs like "must" indicate a strong belief or certainty, while "might," "may," "could," and "can't" suggest varying degrees of possibility or uncertainty. In the past tense, modal verbs like "must have" indicate a strong belief based on past evidence, while "might have" and "could have" suggest possibilities or uncertainties.

Present tense deductions:

- "The train is late, so he must be stuck in traffic."
- "I can't find my keys anywhere. They might be in the living room."

Past tense deductions:

- "She arrived at the party wearing a wet coat, so it must have been raining."
- "He failed the exam, even though he studied a lot. He could have been too nervous."

Task 2.12
Use the words in brackets to write sentences with must have and can't have/couldn't have/might not have.

1. We went to our friends' house and rang the doorbell, but nobody answered. (they / go out) _____ They must have gone out .
2. Sarah hasn't contacted me.
(she / get / my message) She might not have got my message.
3. The jacket you bought is very good quality.
(it / be / very expensive) _____
4. I haven't seen our neighbours for the last few days.
(they / go away) _____
5. I can't find my umbrella.
(I / leave / it in the restaurant last night) _____

6. Amy was in a very difficult situation when she lost her job.
(it / be / easy for her) _____

7. There was a man standing outside the cafe. He was there a long time.
(he / wait / for somebody) _____
8. Rachel did the opposite of what I asked her to do.
(she / understand / what I said) _____
9. When I got back to my car, it was unlocked.
(I / forget / to lock it) _____
10. My neighbours were making a lot of noise in the night. It woke me up.
(they / have / a party) _____
11. The light was red, but the car didn't stop.
(the driver / see / the red light) _____
12. Paul has had these shoes for years, but they still look new.
(he / wear / them much) _____

READING SECTION

- What to discuss

This chapter discusses narrative stories in the form of children's stories from around the world. It could be in the form of fairytales or folktales.
- Fairytales and folktales

Fairytales and folktales are narratives that are enjoyed by many people and children. But what are the differences between the two? Below is the explanation by Diffzy (2023).

Parameters of Comparison	Fairytales	Folktales
Narration	Magical or Fantasy	Moral or real
Characters	Royalty or Fairies	Common and flawed people
Animals	Flying horses, unicorns, dragons	Symbolic everyday animals that can speak
Conclusion	Mostly happy endings	Mostly sad/happy endings
Themes	Entertainment, engagement	Moral themes
Audience	Children	People in general
Settings	Imaginary palaces, castles, cloud castles, underwater settings.	Real and normal day-to-day village or town settings.

Hans in Luck
A German Folktale

Hans had served his master for seven years and finally asked to go home to his mother. As a reward for his faithful service, his master gave him a lump of gold as big as his head. Hans, thrilled, threw the gold over his shoulder and set off toward his village.

On the road, Hans met a horseman. "Ah, riding is such a fine way to travel!" Hans exclaimed. The rider, noticing Hans's struggle, offered to trade his horse for Hans's gold. Hans agreed, and the rider taught him how to ride: "When you want to go faster, chuckle with your tongue and cry, 'Gee up! Gee up!'"

Hans eagerly mounted the horse and set off. However, when he tried to speed up, the horse bolted, throwing Hans into a ditch. Fortunately, a passing peasant stopped the horse. Hans, deciding never to ride again, admired the peasant's cow. "One can walk behind a cow without any trouble and enjoy milk, butter, and cheese," he thought. The peasant, seeing an opportunity, offered to trade his cow for Hans's horse. Hans accepted happily.

As the day grew hotter, Hans decided to milk his new cow but found she gave no milk. A butcher passing by with a pig in a wheelbarrow noticed Hans's struggle. The butcher informed Hans that his cow was too old to produce milk and offered to trade his pig for Hans's cow. Hans, enticed by the thought of delicious pork and sausages, agreed to the trade.

Hans continued his journey with the pig until he met a boy carrying a goose. The boy, heading to a feast, admired Hans's pig but warned him that a pig had been stolen from the village mayor. Afraid that his pig might be the stolen one, Hans hastily agreed to trade his pig for the boy's goose.

Feeling relieved, Hans walked on with the goose until he reached a village where he encountered a knife-grinder. The grinder sang cheerfully as he worked, and Hans, intrigued, stopped to talk. The grinder boasted of his prosperous business and suggested that Hans become a grinder, too. All Hans needed was a grindstone, which the grinder conveniently offered in exchange for Hans's goose. Hans, believing he would become rich, eagerly made the trade.

Now carrying the heavy grindstone, Hans soon grew tired. As he approached a stream, he bent down to drink, accidentally pushing the stone into the water. Watching it sink, Hans felt a sudden sense of relief. Free from his burdens, he leapt for joy, declaring, "No man under the sun is as lucky as I am!"

With a light heart and unburdened, Hans continued merrily on his way until he reached his mother's house.

Task 3.1
Answer the questions
based on the story.

1. Where did Hans want to go?

2. Initially, what did Hans go home with?

3. In the end, what did he have?

4. In your opinion, what were Hans' characteristics?

5. In your opinion, did the people take advantage of Hans? Why or why not?

Task 3.2
Check the story again.
Do you think these statements are TRUE (T), FALSE (F), or NOT GIVEN (NG)?

1. (____) Hans's mother was eagerly waiting for him to return home.
2. (____) Hans carefully placed the gold in his pocket before heading to his village.
3. (____) The butcher offered to help Hans with his cow.
4. (____) Hans travelled with the pig until he encountered a boy with a goose.
5. (____) The village where Hans encountered the knife-grinder was known for its blacksmiths.
6. (____) Carrying the heavy grindstone, Hans quickly became exhausted.
7. (____) Hans will never forget the burdens he carried on his journey.

Pre-reading activity

A narrative story is a structured sequence of events or experiences, whether true or fictional. It aims to engage the reader by presenting a plot, interesting characters, and a meaningful theme or message. Here are some key features of narrative stories:

1. Plot

The plot is the sequence of events that make up the story. It typically includes:

- Orientation: Introduces the setting, characters, and initial situation.
- Rising Action: A series of events that build tension and develop the story.

- Climax: The turning point or most intense moment of the story.
- Falling Action: Events that follow the climax and lead towards resolution.
- Resolution: The conclusion is where conflicts are resolved, and the story comes to an end.

2. Characters

Characters are the individuals who participate in the story. They can be:

- Protagonist: The main character around whom the story revolves.
- Antagonist: The character or force that opposes the protagonist.
- Supporting Characters: Other characters who play roles that contribute to the development of the plot and main characters.

3. Setting

The setting provides the backdrop against which the story takes place. It includes:

- Time: When the story occurs (past, present, future).
- Place: Where the story takes place (geographical location, environment).
- Social Context: The cultural, historical, and societal norms influencing the story.

4. Theme

The theme is the central idea or underlying message of the story. It reflects the author's perspective on life or a specific topic. Themes can be explicit or implicit and often explore universal concepts like love, courage, betrayal, and justice.

5. Point of View

The point of view determines through whose perspective the story is told. It can be:

- First Person: The narrator is a character within the story, using "I" or "we."
- Second Person: The narrator addresses the reader directly as "you."
- Third Person: The narrator is outside the story, using "he," "she," or "they." This can be:
 - a) Omniscient: The narrator knows all thoughts, feelings, and events.

- b) Limited: The narrator knows only the thoughts and feelings of one character.

6. Conflict

Conflict is a struggle between opposing forces that drives the plot. Types of conflict include:

- Character vs. Character: Conflict between two characters.
- Character vs. Self: Internal struggle within a character.
- Character vs. Nature: Conflict between a character and natural forces.
- Character vs. Society: Conflict between a character and societal norms or laws.

7. Tone and Mood

- Tone: The author's attitude toward the subject or audience, conveyed through word choice and style.
- Mood: The atmosphere or emotional setting of the story which evokes specific feelings in the reader.

By incorporating these features, a narrative story becomes a rich, engaging experience that captivates readers and conveys meaningful messages.

Read the story, then explore the narrative features.

The Burning of The Rice Fields

A Japanese folktale

In a remote village nestled among the mountains of Japan, there lived a wise old man and his beloved grandson, Yone. From their humble abode atop the mountain, they overlooked the sprawling rice fields that sustained the village below. Each day, they marvelled at the beauty of the fields and the vast expanse of the sea beyond.

One fateful day, as the old man gazed upon the horizon, he noticed an ominous sight: a strange cloud rising where the sea and sky met. Alarmed, he rushed to his grandson, urgently requesting a burning brand from the hearth. Confused but obedient, Yone complied, and together, they hastened to the rice fields.

To Yone's horror, his grandfather began setting fire to the ripe, dry rice stalks. Overwhelmed with disbelief, Yone questioned his grandfather's actions, but the old man insisted they must act quickly. With a heavy heart, Yone reluctantly followed suit, igniting the fields.

As flames engulfed the rice fields and billows of black smoke rose into the sky, panic spread among the villagers below.

Men, women, and children raced up the mountain to save the precious crop, unaware of the impending danger.

When they reached the mountaintop and witnessed the devastation, their hearts sank. But the old man, with solemn resolve, confessed to setting the fire. As confusion and anger swirled around him, he simply pointed to the sea.

Suddenly, the villagers beheld a terrifying sight: a colossal wall of water towering above the horizon, hurtling toward the land. With a deafening roar, the tsunami crashed upon the shore, engulfing the village below.

Amidst the chaos, the villagers realized the old man's foresight had saved their lives. Though their homes lay submerged beneath the waves, they were grateful to be alive. In the aftermath, they honoured the old man for his quick thinking and bravery, recognizing that his actions had spared them from a far greater catastrophe.

Let's analyze the key features of the story.

1. Plot

Orientation: Introduces the setting of a mountain village in Japan and the main characters, the wise old man and his grandson Yone.

Rising Action: The old man observes a strange cloud on the horizon and takes immediate action by setting fire to the rice fields.

Climax: The villagers witness the destruction of their village by a tsunami triggered by the old man's actions.

Falling Action: The villagers survive the tsunami, realizing the old man's quick thinking saved their lives.

Resolution: The villagers honour the old man for his bravery and foresight.

2. Characters

Protagonists: The wise old man and his grandson Yone.

Antagonists: The impending tsunami that threatens the village.

Supporting Characters: The villagers who rush to save the rice fields and later honour the old man.

3. Setting

Time: Unspecified, but likely set in ancient or rural Japan.

Place: A mountain village overlooking rice fields and the sea.

Social Context: Reflects the communal nature of Japanese society and the reliance on agriculture for sustenance.

4. Theme

Quick Thinking and Bravery: The story emphasizes the importance of thinking quickly and taking decisive action in the face of imminent danger.

Community and Sacrifice: The villagers come together to save their livelihoods and later recognize the old man's sacrifice for the greater good.

5. Point of View

Third Person: The story is narrated from an external perspective, allowing insight into the thoughts and actions of multiple characters.

6. Conflict

Character vs. Nature: The conflict arises from the impending tsunami and the old man's decision to set fire to the rice fields as a preemptive measure.

7. Tone and Mood

Tone: Serious and solemn, reflecting the gravity of the situation and the old man's sacrifice.

Mood: Tense and suspenseful as the villagers confront the imminent danger of the tsunami.

Task 3.3
Let's reflect on the story by answering
questions.

1. Have you ever experienced a situation where someone's actions seemed strange or alarming at first but later turned out to be life-saving?

2. Do you think it's better to take immediate action in a crisis, even if it seems risky, or to wait for more information before deciding?

3. How do you think communities can prepare themselves for natural disasters like tsunamis or earthquakes?

4. How can individuals show gratitude and appreciation for those who have helped them in times of need?

Task 3.4
Choose the correct
answer.

1. What was the relationship between the old man and Yone?
 - A. They were neighbours.
 - B. They were father and son.
 - C. They were uncle and cousin.

Pre-reading activity

The moral of a story is the lesson or principle that the narrative seeks to convey to its audience. It often reflects the values or ethics that the author believes are important. Morals are intended to teach readers or listeners about right and wrong, and they can provide guidance on how to behave in various situations. They are a way of imparting wisdom or reinforcing cultural and social norms. Morals can be explicitly stated at the end of a story or subtly woven into the plot and character actions.

Origin of the Landak River

A Folktale from Indonesia

Long ago, a farmer and his wife lived simply in a village by a forest. They were known for their kindness, always helping those in need. One night, as they rested, a white centipede emerged from the wife's head. Astonished, the farmer followed it to a small pond nearby, where it vanished. He returned home to find his wife still asleep.

The next morning, the wife recounted a strange dream: "I walked through a vast field to a lake, where a giant hedgehog glared at me. I ran away in fear." Intrigued, the farmer revisited the pond and discovered a shiny object—a golden hedgehog statue with diamond eyes. He brought it home.

That night, the farmer dreamt of a giant hedgehog pleading, "Let me stay in your home. In return, I will grant your wishes. Caress the statue's head and say the prayer to start and stop your wish." The following day, the farmer shared his dream with his wife, and they decided to test it. Gently caressing the statue's head, the farmer prayed for rice. Rice flowed from the statue's mouth until he said the prayer to stop it.

Their wishes were fulfilled, and the farmer and his wife became wealthy but remained generous, helping the poor. Their kindness spread, attracting many in need.

One day, a thief learned of the golden hedgehog's secret. Posing as a beggar, he stole the statue and fled to Ngabang, a drought-stricken district. Seeking favour, the thief promised the people water. He caressed the statue and prayed, and water gushed from its mouth. The people rejoiced, but the water didn't stop. The thief, unaware of the stopping prayer, panicked as the water turned into a flood.

As the area began to flood, the terrified villagers fled. The thief tried to escape but found himself immobilized, envisioning a giant hedgehog gripping his legs. The water continued to flow, forming a river and drowning the thief. The people named the river Sungai Landak, or Hedgehog River, in memory of the event.

Thus, the Landak River was born, a reminder of the farmer's kindness and the thief's greed.

The Town Mouse & the Country Mouse

An Aesop's Fable

A Town Mouse once visited a relative who lived in the country. For lunch, the Country Mouse served wheat stalks, roots, and acorns, with a dash of cold water for drink. The Town Mouse ate very sparingly, nibbling a little of this and a little of that, and by her manner, she made it very plain that she ate the simple food only to be polite.

After the meal, the friends had a long talk, or rather, the Town Mouse talked about her life in the city while the Country Mouse listened. They then went to bed in a cosy nest in the hedgerow and slept in quiet and comfort until morning. In her sleep, the Country Mouse dreamed she was a Town Mouse with all the luxuries and delights of city life that her friend had described to her. So, the next day, when the Town Mouse asked the Country Mouse to go home with her to the city, she gladly said yes.

When they reached the mansion in which the Town Mouse lived, they found on the table in the dining room the leavings of a very lavish banquet. There were sweetmeats and jellies, pastries, delicious cheeses, indeed, the most tempting foods that a Mouse can imagine. But just as the Country Mouse was about to nibble a dainty bit of pastry, she heard a Cat mew loudly and scratch at the door. In great fear, the Mice scurried to a hiding place, where they lay quite still for a long time, hardly daring to breathe. When at last they ventured back to the feast, the door opened suddenly and in came the servants to clear the table, followed by the House Dog.

The Country Mouse stopped in the Town Mouse's den only long enough to pick up her carpet bag and umbrella.

"You may have luxuries and dainties that I have not," she said as she hurried away, "but I prefer my plain food and simple life in the country with the peace and security that go with it."

GRAMMAR SECTION

What to discuss This chapter discusses past tenses in the context of simple past, past progressive and past perfect tenses.

- The simple past tense is used to describe completed actions or events in the past. It indicates that the action happened and ended at a specific time in the past.

For example, "She cooked dinner last night."

Here, the simple past tense "cooked" shows that the action of cooking occurred and ended in the past.

- The past progressive tense, also known as the past continuous tense, is used to describe ongoing actions or events that were happening at a specific time in the past. It emphasizes the duration or progression of the action.

For instance, "They were studying when the phone rang."

In this example, the past progressive tense "were studying" indicates the ongoing action of studying at a particular point in the past when the phone rang.

- The past perfect tense is used to show that an action or event was completed before another past action or time reference. It is used to establish a sequence of events in the past.

For example, "She had already finished her work when he arrived."

Here, the past perfect tense "had finished" indicates that the action of finishing the work occurred before the arrival of the person.

In summary, the simple past tense is used to describe completed actions, the past progressive tense highlights ongoing actions in the past, and the past perfect tense establishes the sequence of events in the past.

Observe this sample.

simple past → Sometimes after the call ended, nobody moved. past progressive → They were just sitting there quietly. They tried to understand what had happened. past perfect → Then, the father whispered, "We won a million dollars!"

READING SECTION

SHORT STORY

Hansen (2024) defines a short story as a brief fictional prose narrative that is shorter than a novel and that usually deals with only a few characters. It is usually concerned with a single effect conveyed in only one or a few significant episodes or scenes. The form encourages economy of setting, concise narrative, and the omission of a complex plot; character is disclosed in action and dramatic encounters but is seldom fully developed. Despite its relatively limited scope, a short story is often judged by its ability to provide a "complete" or satisfying treatment of its characters and subject.

The American Pepper

"Mummy! Mummy!" shouted little Murna racing from the front door through to the kitchen. "There's a parcel. The postman's brought a parcel!"

Her mother, Savni, looked at her in surprise. She had no idea who could have sent them a parcel. Maybe it was a mistake. She hurried to the door to find out. Sure enough, the postman was there, holding a parcel about the size of a small brick.

"From America, madam," he said. "See! American stamps."

It was true. In the top right-hand corner of the brown paper parcel were three strange-looking stamps showing a man's head. The package was addressed to Savni in big, clear black letters.

"Well, I suppose it must be from Great-Aunt Pasni," said Savni to herself as the postman went on his way down the street, whistling. "Although it must be twenty years since we heard anything from her. I thought she would have been dead by now."

Savni's husband Jornas and her son Arinas were just coming in from the garden, where Murna had run to tell them about the parcel. "Well, open it then!" said Arinas impatiently. "Let's see what's inside!"

Setting the parcel down in the middle of the table, Savni carefully began to tear open the paper. Inside, there was a large silver container with a hinged lid, which was taped shut. There was also a letter.

"What is it? What is it?" demanded Murna impatiently. "Is it a present?"

"I have no idea," said Savni in confusion. "I think it must be from Great-Aunt Pasni. She went to America almost thirty years ago now. But we haven't heard from her in twenty years. Perhaps the letter will tell us." She opened the folded page cautiously, then looked up in dismay. "Well, this is no help!" she said in annoyance. "It's written in English! How does she expect us to read English? We're poor people. We have no education. Maybe Pasni has forgotten her native language after thirty years in America."

"Well, open the pot, anyway," said Jornas. "Let's see what's inside."

Cautiously, Savni pulled the tape from the neck of the silver pot and opened the lid. Four heads touched over the top of the container as their owners stared down inside.

"Strange," said Arinas. "All I see is powder." The pot was about one-third full of a kind of light-grey powder.

"What is it?" asked Murna, mystified.

"We don't know, darling," said Savni, stroking her daughter's hair. "What do you think?" Murna stared again into the pot.

"I think it's coffee," she announced, finally. "American coffee."

"It's the wrong colour for coffee, darling," said Jornas thoughtfully. "But maybe she's on the right track. It must be some kind of food." Murna, by now, had her nose right down into the pot. Suddenly, she lifted her head and sneezed loudly.

"Id god ub by doze," she explained.

"That's it!" said Arinas. "It must be pepper! Let me try some." Dipping a finger into the powder, he licked it. "Yes," he said, "it's pepper all right. Mild but quite tasty. It's American pepper."

"All right," said Savni, "we'll try it on the stew tonight. We'll have American-style stew!"

That evening, the whole family agreed that the American pepper had added a special extra taste to their usual evening stew. They were delighted with it. By the end of the week, there was only a teaspoonful of the grey powder left in the silver container. Then Savni called a halt.

"We're saving the last bit for Sunday. Dr. Haret is coming to dinner, and we'll let him have some as a special treat. Then it will be finished."

The following Sunday, the whole family put on their best clothes and got ready for dinner with Dr. Haret. He was the local doctor, and he had become a friend of the family many years before when he had saved Arinas's life after an accident. Once every couple of months, Savni invited the doctor for dinner, and they all looked forward to his entertaining stories of his youth at the university in the capital.

During dinner, Savni explained to the doctor about the mysterious American pepper, the last of which she had put in the stew they were eating, and the letter they could not read.

"Well, give it to me, give it to me!" said the doctor briskly. "I speak English! I can translate it for you."

Savni brought the letter, and the family waited, fascinated, as the doctor began to translate.

"Dear Savni, you don't know me, but I am the son of your old Great-Aunt Pasni. She never talked much to us about the old country, but in her final illness earlier this year, she told us that after her death, she wanted her ashes to be sent back home to you so that you could scatter them on the hills of the country where she was born. My mother died two weeks ago, and her funeral and cremation took place last week. I am sending her ashes to you in a silver casket. Please do as she asked and spread them over the ground near where she was born. Your cousin, George Leary."

Another sample of narrative text appears in the form of a comic strip. According to Kunzle (2023), a comic strip is a “series of adjacent drawn images, usually arranged horizontally, that are designed to be read as a narrative or a chronological sequence”. The story is usually original in this form. Words may be introduced within or near each image, or they may be dispensed with altogether. The comic strip is essentially a mass medium printed in a magazine, a newspaper, or a book. The term graphic novel is now established for the longer and more novel-like coherent story, and the term sequential art is also in use. A comic book is a bound collection of strips, each of which typically tells a single story or a gag (joke) in a few panels or else a segment of a continuous story. Most of the more popular newspaper comic strips are eventually collected over a varying period of time and published in book form.

Observe this sample of a comic strip from Davis (2023).

Task 4.3
Answer the questions to understand the comic better.

1. Who is the main character in the comic strip?

2. What is the main problem in the story?

3. What can you infer about the relationship between Garfield, the cat and Jon, the owner? Explain your answer.

Task 4.4
Observe this comic. Then, complete the parts of the story.

Another sample of narrative text is a recount text. A recount text is a type of writing that retells past events or experiences. Its primary purpose is to inform or entertain the audience by narrating what happened in a structured and chronological manner. Here are the key features and components of a recount text:

1. Orientation: This part introduces the background information, such as who was involved, what happened, where it took place, and when it occurred. It sets the scene for the reader.
2. Events: A series of events are described in chronological order. This section recounts the main happenings in the order they occurred, often focusing on specific details to give a clear and vivid picture of the events.

Love and the Cabbie

By Art Buchwald

You can't live a perfect day without doing something for someone who will never be able to repay you.

~John Wooden

I was in New York the other day and rode with a friend in a taxi. When we got out, my friend said to the driver, "Thank you for the ride. You did a superb job of driving."

The taxi driver was stunned for a second. Then he said, "Are you a wise guy or something?"

"No, my dear man, and I'm not putting you on. I admire the way you keep cool in heavy traffic."

"Yeah," the driver said and drove off. "What was that all about?" I asked.

"I am trying to bring love back to New York," he said. "I believe it's the only thing that can save the city."

"How can one man save New York?"

"It's not one man. I believe I have made that taxi driver's day. Suppose he has 20 fares. He's going to be nice to those 20 fares because someone was nice to him. Those fares, in turn, will be kinder to their employees, shopkeepers, waiters or even their own families. Eventually, the goodwill could spread to at least 1,000 people. Now, that isn't bad, is it?"

"But you're depending on that taxi driver to pass your goodwill to others."

"I'm not depending on it," my friend said. "I'm aware that the system isn't foolproof, so I might have to deal with 10 different people today. If out of 10 I can make three happy, then eventually I can indirectly influence the attitudes of 3,000 more."

"It sounds good on paper," I admitted, "but I'm not sure it works in practice."

"Nothing is lost if it doesn't. It didn't take any of my time to tell that man he was doing a good job. He neither received a larger tip nor a smaller tip. If it fell on deaf ears, so what? Tomorrow, there will be another taxi driver I can try to make happy."

"You're some kind of a nut," I said.

"That shows how cynical you have become. I have made a study of this. The thing that seems to be lacking, besides money, for our postal employees is that no one tells people who work for the post office what a good job they're doing."

"But they're not doing a good job."

"They're not doing a good job because they feel no one cares if they do or not. Why shouldn't someone say a kind word to them?"

We were walking past a structure in the process of being built and passed five workmen eating their lunch. My friend stopped. "That's a magnificent job you men have done. It must be difficult and dangerous work."

The workmen eyed my friend suspiciously. "When will it be finished?"

"June," a man grunted.

"Ah. That really is impressive. You must all be very proud."

We walked away. I said to him, "I haven't seen anyone like you since Man of La Mancha."

"When those men digest my words, they will feel better for it. Somehow, the city will benefit from their happiness."

"But you can't do this all alone!" I protested. "You're just one man."

"The most important thing is not to get discouraged. Making people in the city become kind again is not an easy job, but if I can enlist other people in my campaign..."

"You just winked at a very plain-looking woman," I said.

"Yes, I know," he replied. "And if she's a schoolteacher, her class will be in for a fantastic day."

Anecdotes are also part of the narrative text family. An anecdote is a short, interesting, or amusing story about a real incident or person. These brief narratives are often used to illustrate a point, inject humour, or provide insight into a topic. Anecdotes are commonly employed in conversations, speeches, articles, and books to engage the audience and make the subject matter more relatable or memorable.

ANECDOTE #1
GOOD ENGLISH

My ESL students try so hard and are so appreciative. One student paid me the ultimate compliment when she said, “You teach English good.” Another assured me, “I will always forget you.” And a third insisted, “I thank you from the heart of my bottom.”

ANECDOTE #2
PLAYGROUND RULES

Last year, my youngest granddaughter, Samantha Grace, started kindergarten. After a few days, she came home and said, “Grandpa, I learned the slide rule today.” I was happy to hear that she was learning something new and really pleased it was about math. I asked her to explain it, and she said, “Only one kid on the slide at a time.”
 So much for math!

ANECDOTE #3

THE MOST CONFUSING PASSWORD

I was in a couple's home trying to fix their Internet connection. The husband called out to his wife in the other room for the computer password. "Start with a capital S, then 123," she shouted back. We tried S123 several times, but it didn't work. So we called the wife in. As she input the password, she muttered, "I really don't know what's so difficult about typing Start123."

ANECDOTE #4

INCUMBENT IMBECILE

Recently, I heard the former mayor of Reading, Pennsylvania, recount some funny stories about his time in office. One happened while he was running for reelection; he was in a bar and paid for a woman's drink. She thanked him but wondered why a stranger had bought her a beer. "I'm running for mayor," he told her, "and I want your vote." "You got it," she said, grabbing her glass. "Anyone's better than the idiot who's in there now."

Task 4.7

Let's check if you understand the jokes.

GRAMMAR SECTION

What to discuss

This chapter discusses reported speech, which, in some other literature, is defined as indirect speech.
Reported speech, also known as indirect speech, is a method of conveying what someone said without using their exact words. It involves reporting or relaying speech in a more indirect manner, often with changes in verb tenses, pronouns, and word order. The purpose of reported speech is to communicate someone's words while maintaining the overall meaning and intention, but without using direct quotations.

Reported speech affects VERBs

Reported speech affects PRONOUNS

Reported speech affects ADVERBs

Jane told me yesterday, "I can help you tomorrow if you want."

Jane told me that she could help me today if I wanted.

Jane told Jim last week, "I can help you tomorrow if you want."

Jane told Jim last week that she could help him on the following day if he wanted.

Yes/No Questions

Jane asked me, "Can I send my work through email?"

Jane asked if she could send her work through email.

Jane asked whether she could send her work through email.

Wh+H Questions

Jane asked me, "Where did you get the answer from?"

Jane asked me where I had got the answer from.

Jane asked me, "How are you?"

Jane asked how I was.

Reported speech involves conveying what someone said in a more indirect manner. When using reported speech, there are different rules for present and past tenses.

In present reported speech, the reporting verb can be in the present tense, such as "she says." If the original statement is still true, there is no need to change the tense in the reported speech. For example, if she says, "He has missed the train," in reported speech, it can be reported as "She says (that) he has missed the train."

In past reported speech, the reporting verb is typically in the past tense. The tense in reported speech is usually shifted back to one tense from the original statement. For example, if she said, "He has missed the train," in reported speech, it can be reported as "She said (that) he had missed the train."

However, there are exceptions. If the information in the original statement is still true or if the reporting verb is in the present tense, there may not be a need to change the tense in reported speech. For example, if someone said, "The sky is blue," in reported speech, it can be reported as, "She said (that) the sky is blue." because the context of the information is still correct in the time frame of the reported speech.

It's important to note that these rules may vary depending on the context and specific situations. The choice of tense in reported speech depends on the time frame and the accuracy of the reported information.

Task 4.9
You talked to some friends of yours (Paul, Tom, Anna etc.). Read what they said on the left (direct speech). Later (the same day) you tell another friend what they said (reported speech). Complete the sentences.

	DIRECT SPEECH	REPORTED SPEECH
You:	Are you going to work today, Paul?	Paul didn't go to work today.
Paul:	No, I'm feeling ill.	He said he was feeling ill .
You:	Shall we walk to the station?	I wanted to walk to the station, but Tom said (1)
Tom:	No, it's too far. Let's get a taxi.	  far.
You:	Have you been invited to the party?	Anna has been invited to the party, but she told me (2)
Anna:	Yes, but I don't want to go.	  to go.
You:	When are you going away, Dan?	I asked Dan about his travel plans. He said (3)
Dan:	I'll let you know next week.	  next week.
You:	Do you ever see Rachel these days?	I asked Ben about Rachel, but he told me (4)
Ben:	I haven't seen her for a while.	  for a while.
You:	Where can I borrow a guitar?	I needed to borrow a guitar, and Kate said (5)
Kate:	You can borrow mine.	  .
You:	How's your job, Sue?	I asked Sue about her job. She said (6)
Sue:	I'm not enjoying it very much.	  very much.

You:	Do you still have your car?	I asked James about his car.
James :	No, I sold it a few months ago.	He told me (7) _____ a few months ago.
You:	What's the name of the cafe we went to?	I asked Sarah the name of the cafe we went to, but she said (8) _____.
Sarah:	I don't know.
You:	How many students are there in your class, Amy?	I asked Amy about her school, and she told me (9) _____ class.
Amy:	Twenty.

Task 4.10
Pay attention to the reported verb and the accuracy of the information in the given time frame. Then, supply the appropriate reported speech.

1. She says, "I love chocolate."

2. They explain, "We always want to travel the world."

3. We tell him, "We are going to the park. Are you coming?"

4. He told me, "We will meet at the café."

5. The teacher said, "They are studying for the exam this whole day."

6. The seller explains, "The item is for sale only for this week."

7. The coach asked, "You have to run for under a minute to qualify."

8. His friend mentions, "I can swim. And I am always good at swimming."

9. The tutor said, "They have finished their homework."

Task 4.11
Complete the second sentence so that it means the same as the direct speech. Pay particular attention to the word order.

1. "Do you know where my car keys are?" Tom asked his wife.
Tom asked his wife if she knew _____ where his car keys were.
2. "Are you going to the party?" Melissa asked Paola.
Melissa asked Paola whether _____
3. "Have you been to the new department store?" Peter's friend asked him.
Peter's friend asked him whether _____
4. "Will you be home late on Tuesday?" Alex's father asked him.
Alex's father asked him if _____
5. The police questions, "Did you see the victim that night?"

6. The teacher asked Jim, "Have you submitted the assignment?"

7. Andea murmured, "Should I go? Should I stay? I really don't know."

8. Jim pleaded, "Can you please let me go? I am so tired."

Task 4.12
Develop a reported speech for these direct speeches.
You may supply your own reported verbs.

1. "Please turn off the lights. We must conserve energy."

2. "Don't forget to submit your assignment by tomorrow. I don't receive late submissions."

3. "Make sure to lock the door when you leave. Then, leave the key to the security at the gate."

4. "Can you please bring me a glass of water? I feel so thirsty."

5. "Don't touch that hot pan! You might burn your hand."

6. "Could you please clean your room? I want this room spotless by the time I return from work."

7. "Remember to buy eggs on your way home. We need a kilo for your cake."

8. "Smile. You look very beautiful when you're smiling."

Task 4.13
Provide appropriate reported speech to
questions.

1. Eve asked him, "What can I do for you?"

2. They asked me, "What's the time?"

3. He asks, "Who was looking for the lost Englishmen?"

4. She asked, "When has Carol lost her wallet?"

5. The teacher asks them, "Why are you late?"

6. She asked him, "Where have you lost your camera?"

7. "What will you choose?" they asked me after a while.

8. "How long have you been standing in line?" he wants to know.

9. "What do you do for a living?" she wondered.

10. "Where did you live before that?" they wanted to know.

11. "Why are you reading this book?" he was curious.

Task 4.14
Provide appropriate reported speech to these direct speeches.
Use the provided reported verbs to help you.

1. Please come to the meeting tomorrow. Don't forget to bring the report.

The boss told me _____

2. What a beautiful day it is! We should go for a picnic.

She exclaimed that _____

3. Why did you cancel the reservation? We were really looking forward to it.

He disappointedly asks _____

4. Get out of my house! I can't believe you betrayed my trust.

She yelled at him _____

5. Could you help us with the project? We are running out of time.

They plead _____

6. How did you solve that math problem? I've been struggling with it for hours.

He finally asked me _____

7. Can you lend me some money? I promise to pay you back next week.

She asked me _____

8. We won the competition! It was such a tough competition.

They called _____

9. Would you like to join us for the party? We are celebrating my birthday.

He called me _____

How the World Works

LESSON OBJECTIVES

- To read explanation text

GRAMMAR FEATURES

- Passive voice

READING SECTION

discuss

In this chapter, we will explore explanation texts—texts that help us understand how or why something happens. Explanation texts are commonly found in science, geography, and other factual subjects. They describe processes, systems, or phenomena such as how volcanoes erupt, why seasons change, or how a bicycle works.

Unlike procedure texts that tell us what to do, explanation texts tell us why things happen the way they do. To make their ideas clear, explanation texts often use passive voice, technical vocabulary, and logical sequencing. In this chapter, you will learn how to read and write clear explanations using these language features.

How Social Media Algorithms Influence What We See Online

Have you ever wondered why certain posts keep showing up on your feed? That's the work of social media algorithms—invisible systems that decide what content you see based on your online behavior. These algorithms don't aim to educate or make users happier. Instead, they are designed to keep people scrolling for as long as possible.

According to Dr. Parker Woodroof, a social media expert from the University of Alabama at Birmingham, algorithms work like a DJ that plays your favorite songs. They pay attention to every action you take—what you click, how long you pause on a post, what you share, and even the time of day you scroll. Over time, they "learn" your habits and show you more of the same kind of content.

However, this pattern-based design creates problems. Social media tends to reward posts that are emotional or dramatic—such as shocking news, humor, or controversy—rather than those that are thoughtful or accurate. As a result, users, especially young people, may develop a false sense of what is real or important. Social media can become a highlight reel, filled with idealized images and one-sided messages, leading to feelings of comparison or low self-esteem.

Many parents assume that following "good" accounts is enough to keep their children safe online. But algorithms often recommend related content, which may not be age-appropriate. Also, harmful effects—such as misinformation or negative self-image—don't require hours of screen time. Sometimes, just a few moments are enough.

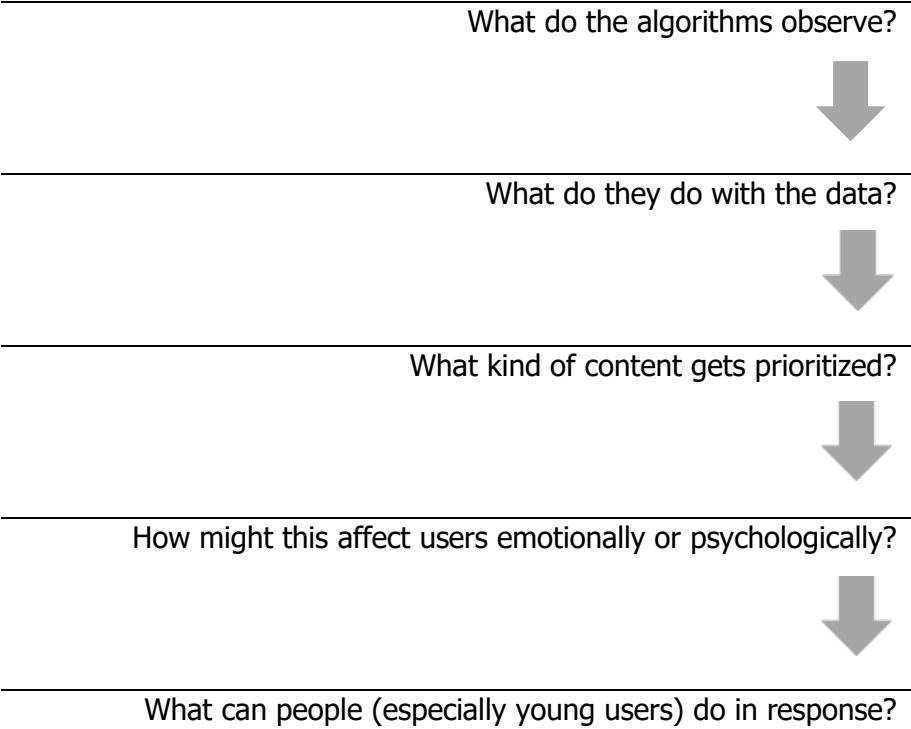

To help teens build digital resilience, Dr. Woodroof encourages open conversations between parents and children. He recommends asking reflective questions like “How did that post make you feel?” or “What do you think is missing from this picture?” These habits help young people think critically about what they see.

Most importantly, young people should remember: you are more than what you scroll through. Learning to recognize how algorithms work is the first step toward using social media wisely.

How Brain Scans Help Scientists Understand Lying

For over a century, scientists have tried to develop machines that can reliably detect lies. Early tools like the polygraph measured things like blood pressure and heart rate, but they often failed to tell the difference between lying and other emotional reactions. Recently, researchers have turned to brain scans and artificial intelligence (AI) to better understand the science of deception.

A team of scientists from the University of California, including Dr. Ming Hsu, used a brain imaging technique called functional MRI (fMRI) to observe how the brain works during lying. In their study, participants played two games inside an fMRI scanner. In one game, they could choose to lie to get more money. In another, they made selfish or generous choices without lying. The researchers then trained a computer model to identify patterns in brain activity when someone was lying.

At first, the results were promising: the model could predict lies with 79% accuracy. However, there was a problem. The brain activity of someone lying looked very similar to someone just being selfish. This meant the model was picking up on general behaviors—like self-interest—rather than lying itself.

To fix this, the team improved their model by teaching it to focus on brain signals linked only to lying. They gave more weight to unique signs of deception and reduced the influence of signals related to selfishness. After adjustments, the model could still recognize lies with 70% accuracy, but it no longer confused them with selfish behavior.

This research shows that lying is not simple. It involves many parts of the brain and overlaps with emotions like anxiety and intentions like selfishness. There may never be a perfect lie detector, but this study is a big step forward. It also opens new possibilities for using brain scans and AI in other fields, such as mental health and marketing.

In the end, while we are still far from creating a foolproof lie detector, scientists are finally making progress by asking the right questions and using smarter tools.

PHOTOSYNTHESIS

All living organisms on earth consist of one or more cells. Each cell runs on the chemical energy found mainly in carbohydrate molecules (food), and the majority of these molecules are produced by one process: photosynthesis. Through photosynthesis, certain organisms convert solar energy (sunlight) into chemical energy, which is then used to build carbohydrate molecules. The energy used to hold these molecules together is released when an organism breaks down food. Cells then use this energy to perform work, such as cellular respiration.

The energy that is harnessed from photosynthesis enters the ecosystems of our planet continuously and is transferred from one organism to another. Therefore, directly or indirectly, the process of photosynthesis provides most of the energy required by living things on earth. Photosynthesis also results in the release of oxygen into the atmosphere. In short, to eat and breathe, humans depend almost entirely on the organisms that carry out photosynthesis.

Photosynthesis takes place in two stages: the light-dependent reactions and the Calvin cycle. In the light-dependent reactions, which take place at the thylakoid membrane, chlorophyll absorbs energy from sunlight and then converts it into chemical energy with the use of water. The light-dependent reactions release oxygen from the hydrolysis of water as a byproduct. In the Calvin cycle, which takes place in the stroma, the chemical energy derived from the light-dependent reactions drives both the capture of carbon in carbon dioxide molecules and the subsequent assembly of sugar molecules. The two reactions use carrier molecules to transport the energy from one to the other. The carriers that move energy from the light-dependent reactions to the Calvin cycle reactions can be thought of as "full" because they bring energy. After the energy is released, the “empty” energy carriers return to the light-dependent reactions to obtain more energy.

The process of photosynthesis transformed life on earth. By harnessing energy from the sun, photosynthesis allowed living things to access enormous amounts of energy. Because of photosynthesis, living things gained access to sufficient energy, allowing them to evolve new structures and achieve the biodiversity that is evident today. Only certain organisms, called autotrophs, can perform photosynthesis; they require the presence of chlorophyll, a specialized pigment that can absorb light and convert light energy into chemical energy. Photosynthesis uses carbon dioxide and water to assemble carbohydrate molecules (usually glucose) and releases oxygen into the air. Eukaryotic autotrophs, such as plants and algae, have organelles called chloroplasts in which photosynthesis takes place.

TASK 5.7
Choose the correct answer
text.

1. What is the author’s primary purpose in the opening paragraph of the passage?
 - A. To describe the chemical structure of carbohydrate molecules in detail.
 - B. To argue that cellular respiration is more important than photosynthesis.
 - C. To establish photosynthesis as the fundamental source of energy for almost all life on Earth.
 - D. To compare autotrophic and heterotrophic nutritional strategies.
 - E. To summarize the history of scientific discoveries about photosynthesis.
2. What two products result from photosynthesis?
 - A. Water and carbon dioxide
 - B. Glucose and oxygen
 - C. Glucose and carbon dioxide
 - D. Water and oxygen
 - E. Carbon dioxide and oxygen
3. Which argument best supports the claim that photosynthesis was a prerequisite for the evolution of complex aerobic life on Earth?
 - A. Photosynthesis occurs only in organisms that possess chloroplasts containing chlorophyll.
 - B. The process releases oxygen, enabling efficient ATP production through cellular respiration in later-evolving organisms.

- C. Autotrophs can convert solar energy directly into chemical energy stored as carbohydrates.
 - D. The Calvin cycle captures atmospheric carbon dioxide to build organic molecules.
 - E. Light-dependent reactions generate “full” energy carriers such as NADPH and ATP.
4. What is the meaning of the word harness as used in this sentence?
"By harnessing energy from the sun, photosynthesis allowed living things to access enormous amounts of energy."
- A. To control and make use of
 - B. To block or prevent
 - C. To store for later use
 - D. To measure or calculate
 - E. To give or share
5. Which of the following statements about photosynthesis is FALSE?
- A. Photosynthesis converts solar energy into chemical energy stored in carbohydrates.
 - B. Chlorophyll is a pigment that absorbs light energy for photosynthesis.
 - C. The Calvin cycle takes place in the thylakoid membrane.
 - D. Oxygen is released during the light-dependent reactions as a byproduct.
 - E. Photosynthesis supports most life on Earth by supplying energy and oxygen.

Why Prioritizing Sleep Matters for Students

Getting enough quality sleep is essential for students' health, learning, and emotional well-being. Yet, many high school and college students sacrifice sleep to meet academic, social, and personal demands. Over time, poor sleep habits can affect everything from memory and mood to academic performance and physical health.

According to experts, teenagers need between 8 to 10 hours of sleep each night, while young adults need around 7 to 9. However, most students sleep far less. Some believe they can function on just a few hours, but true "short sleepers" are extremely rare. Others try to catch up on weekends, but this pattern still leads to sleep deprivation.

Lack of sleep affects the brain and body. In fact, being awake for 18 to 24 hours can impact the brain as much as alcohol does. Sleep-deprived students may experience mood swings, poor focus, low energy, and difficulty handling stress. Long-term effects include increased risk of obesity, heart disease, and even anxiety or depression.

On the other hand, making sleep a priority can significantly improve daily life. Students who sleep well are more focused in class, retain information better, and manage stress more effectively. This is because sleep plays a key role in memory consolidation—helping the brain store and organize what was learned during the day.

Creating good “sleep hygiene” is the first step to better rest. Experts recommend limiting screen time before bed, avoiding caffeine or intense exercise late in the day, and maintaining a consistent sleep schedule—even on weekends. A calming bedtime routine and exposure to natural light in the morning can also improve sleep quality.

Ultimately, students should track their sleep and energy levels to see how rest affects their performance and mood. Even small improvements—like going to bed 30 minutes earlier—can lead to better focus, reduced stress, and healthier habits overall. Prioritizing sleep isn’t just about feeling less tired—it’s about thriving in school and life.

TASK 5.10 Match each word or phrase from the box to its correct meaning.	Word/Phrase	Meaning
	1. Sleep hygiene	a. Fast emotional changes that are hard to control
	2. Deprivation	b. Happening in the same way over time, not changing often
	3. Mood swings	c. A regular pattern or habit you follow before bedtime
	4. Sleep-deprived	d. The state of not having enough of something, like sleep
	5. Caffeine	e. Lacking the rest needed for normal brain and body function
	6. Consistent	f. Mental or emotional pressure that can cause anxiety or tension
	7. Focus	g. A chemical in coffee or tea that makes it harder to fall asleep
	8. Stress	h. Healthy habits that help improve sleep quality
	9. Memory consolidation	i. The ability to pay attention to something without getting distracted

PASSIVE VOICE

A passive sentence is one in which the subject receives the action of the verb rather than performing it. In passive constructions, the focus is often on the action itself or the object of the action rather than on who or what is performing the action. Passive sentences typically include a form of the verb "to be" (e.g., am, is, are, was, were, be, being, been) followed by a past participle of the main verb. The performer of the action (the agent) can be included in a prepositional phrase starting with "by," but it is often omitted if it is unknown or irrelevant.

READING SECTION

What to discuss

In this chapter, we will explore some abridged versions of once-famous works of English literature. An abridged version is a short version of a full-length work of something. If it is an abridged novel, then it is a shorter form of the novel. An abridged version is quite different from a summary. In summary, you might not see the plot as the piece only focuses on the main event. However, in an abridged version, the plot is still maintained, and the events unfold as they do in the full-length version.

Pre-reading activity

Understand these terms before you read the excerpt of the novel.

1. Totalitarianism and Oppression
2. Surveillance and Privacy
3. Propaganda and Truth
4. Language and Thought Control

George Orwell's "1984," published in 1949, warns people about the dangers of totalitarianism. Orwell was a writer known for criticizing society, opposing totalitarian governments, and supporting democratic socialism.

Since its release, "1984" has greatly influenced popular culture and is considered a classic dystopian novel. The book's themes of government surveillance, total control, and manipulation of language and truth are still relevant today.

"1984" has inspired many movies, TV shows, and books. For example, the reality TV show "Big Brother" is named after the book and involves constant surveillance of its contestants. Words from the book, like "Orwellian," are used to describe situations where information is heavily controlled and manipulated.

The novel also affects political discussions, especially about government surveillance and privacy. The book's portrayal of a government that watches its citizens' every move is often used to criticize real-world government policies, such as mass surveillance and data collection by intelligence agencies.

Overall, "1984" is a powerful story that helps people understand the risks of living under a totalitarian government and losing personal freedoms.

By George Orwell

Winston Smith is a low-ranking member of the ruling Party in London, in the nation of Oceania. Everywhere Winston goes, even in his own home, the Party watches him through telescreens; everywhere he looks, he sees the face of the Party's seemingly omniscient leader, a figure known only as Big Brother. The Party controls everything in Oceania, even the people's history and language. Currently, the Party is forcing the implementation of an invented language called Newspeak, which attempts to prevent political rebellion by eliminating all words related to it. Even thinking rebellious thoughts is illegal. Such thoughtcrime is, in fact, the worst of all crimes.

As the novel opens, Winston feels frustrated by the oppression and rigid control of the Party, which prohibits free thought, creativity, and any expression of individuality. Winston dislikes the party and has illegally purchased a diary in which to write his criminal thoughts. He has also become fixated on a powerful Party member named O'Brien, whom Winston believes is a secret member of the Brotherhood—the mysterious, legendary group that works to overthrow the Party.

Winston works in the Ministry of Truth, where he alters historical records to fit the needs of the Party. He notices a co-worker, a beautiful dark-haired girl, staring at him and worries that she is an informant who will turn him in for his thoughtcrime. He is troubled by the Party's control of history: the Party claims that Oceania has always been allied with Eastasia in a war against Eurasia, but Winston seems to recall a time when this was not true. The Party also claims that Emmanuel Goldstein, the alleged leader of the Brotherhood, is the most dangerous man alive, but this does not seem plausible to Winston. Winston spends his evenings wandering through the poorest neighbourhoods in London, where the proletarians, or proles, live squalid lives, relatively free of Party monitoring.

One day, Winston receives a note from the dark-haired girl that reads, "I love you." She tells him her name, Julia, and they begin a relationship. This lasts for some time. Winston is sure that they will be caught and punished sooner or later. The fatalistic Winston knows that he has been doomed since he wrote his first diary entry, while Julia is more pragmatic and optimistic. As Winston's relationship with Julia progresses, his hatred for the Party grows more and more intense. At last, he receives the message that he has been waiting for: O'Brien wants to see him.

Winston and Julia travel to O'Brien's luxurious apartment. As a member of the powerful Inner Party (Winston belongs to the Outer Party), O'Brien leads a life of luxury that Winston can only imagine. O'Brien confirms to Winston and Julia that, like them, he hates the Party and says that he works against it as a member of the Brotherhood. He indoctrinates Winston and Julia into the Brotherhood and gives Winston a copy of Emmanuel Goldstein's book, the manifesto of the Brotherhood. Winston reads the book—an amalgam of several forms of class-based twentieth-century social theory. Suddenly, soldiers barge in and seize Winston and Julia.

Torn away from Julia and taken to a place called the Ministry of Love, Winston finds that O'Brien, too, is a Party spy who simply pretended to be a member of the Brotherhood to trap Winston into committing an open act of rebellion against the Party. O'Brien spends months torturing and brainwashing Winston, who struggles to resist. At last, O'Brien sends him to the dreaded Room 101, the final destination for anyone who opposes the Party. Here, O'Brien tells Winston that he will be forced to confront his worst fear. Throughout the novel, Winston has had recurring nightmares about rats; O'Brien now straps a cage full of rats onto Winston's head and prepares to allow the rats to eat his face. Winston snaps, pleading with O'Brien to do it to Julia, not to him.

Giving up Julia is what O'Brien wanted from Winston all along. After his spirit has broken, Winston is released to the outside world. He meets Julia but no longer feels anything for her. He has accepted the Party entirely and has learned to love Big Brother.

Pre-reading activity

Pride and Prejudice (1813) by Jane Austen is set in the 19th century in regional England. During this time, society had strict class divisions between the upper and middle classes. Gender roles were also very rigid. Women could only gain respect through marriage in this male-dominated society.

Austen's novel addresses universal themes that are still important today, such as sexism and classism. At first, these themes may seem outdated and extreme. However, they remain relevant because people today are still often judged unfairly based on their gender, wealth, and jobs.

In summary, Pride and Prejudice shows old-fashioned values and attitudes about sexism and classism. Despite being set in the past, it is still meaningful for modern readers because it highlights issues of unfair judgment that continue to exist in our society.

Abridged version

Pride and Prejudice

Jane Austen

The news that a wealthy young gentleman named Charles Bingley has rented the manor of Netherfield Park causes a great stir in the nearby village of Longbourn, especially in the Bennet household. The Bennets have five unmarried daughters—from oldest to youngest, Jane, Elizabeth, Mary, Kitty, and Lydia—and Mrs Bennet is desperate to see them all married. After Mr. Bennet pays a social visit to Mr. Bingley, the Bennets attend a ball at which Mr. Bingley is present. He is taken with Jane and spends much of the evening dancing with her. His close friend, Mr. Darcy, is less pleased with the evening and haughtily refuses to dance with Elizabeth, which makes her view him as arrogant and obnoxious.

Jane's friendship with Mr. Bingley continues to burgeon, and Jane pays a visit to the Bingley mansion. On her journey to the house, she is caught in a downpour and catches ill, forcing her to stay at Netherfield for several days. In order to tend to Jane, Elizabeth hikes through muddy fields and arrives with a spattered dress, much to the disdain of the snobbish Miss Bingley, Charles Bingley's sister.

When Elizabeth and Jane return home, they find Mr. Collins visiting their household. Mr. Collins is a young clergyman who stands to inherit Mr. Bennet's property. Shortly after his arrival, he makes a proposal to marry Elizabeth. She turns him down, wounding his pride. Meanwhile, the Bennet girls have become friendly with militia officers stationed in a nearby town. Among them is Wickham, a handsome young soldier who is friendly toward Elizabeth and tells her how Darcy cruelly cheated him out of an inheritance.

At the beginning of winter, Mr Collins has become engaged to Charlotte Lucas, Elizabeth's best friend and the poor daughter of a local knight. Charlotte explains to Elizabeth that she is getting older and needs the match for financial reasons.

That spring, Elizabeth visits Charlotte, who now lives near the home of Mr. Collins's patron, Lady Catherine de Bourgh, who is also Darcy's aunt. Darcy calls on Lady Catherine and encounters Elizabeth, whose presence leads him to make a number of visits to Collins's home, where she is staying. One day, he makes a shocking proposal of marriage, which Elizabeth quickly refuses. She tells Darcy that she considers him arrogant and unpleasant, then scolds him for steering Bingley away from Jane and disinheriting Wickham. Elizabeth accuses him of discouraging Bingley's affection for Jane by falsely believing that Jane did not truly care for him and that the Bennet family was socially beneath the Bingleys. She is furious that Darcy's interference may have ruined her sister's chance at happiness. Darcy leaves her but shortly thereafter delivers a letter to her. In this letter, he admits that he urged Bingley to distance himself from Jane but claims he did so only because he thought their romance was not serious. As for Wickham, he informs Elizabeth that the young officer is a liar and that the real cause of their disagreement is Wickham's attempt to elope with his young sister, Georgiana Darcy.

This letter causes Elizabeth to re-evaluate her feelings about Darcy. She returns home and acts coldly toward Wickham. The militia is leaving town, which makes the younger, rather man-crazy Bennet girls distraught. Lydia manages to obtain permission from her father to spend the summer with an old colonel in Brighton, where Wickham's regiment will be stationed. In June, Elizabeth goes on a journey with the Gardiners, who are relatives of the Bennets. The trip takes her to the neighbourhood of Pemberley, Darcy's estate. She visits Pemberley after making sure that Darcy is away and delights in the building and grounds while hearing from Darcy's servants that he is a wonderful, generous master. Suddenly, Darcy arrives and behaves cordially toward her.

Shortly thereafter, however, a letter arrives from home, telling Elizabeth that Lydia has eloped with Wickham and that the couple is nowhere to be found. Fearful of the disgrace such a situation would bring on her entire family, Elizabeth hastens home. Mr. Gardiner and Mr. Bennet go off to search for Lydia, but Mr. Bennet eventually returns home empty-handed. Just when all hope seems lost, a letter comes from Mr Gardiner saying that the couple has been found and that Wickham has agreed to marry Lydia in exchange for an annual income. The Bennets are convinced that Mr Gardiner has paid off Wickham, but Elizabeth learns that the source of the money is none other than Darcy.

Now married, Wickham and Lydia return to Longbourn briefly, where Mr. Bennet treats them coldly. They then depart for Wickham's new assignment in the North of England. Shortly thereafter, Bingley returns to Netherfield and resumes his courtship of Jane. Bingley then proposes to Jane, to everyone's delight. While the family celebrates, Lady Catherine de Bourgh pays a visit to Longbourn. She corners Elizabeth and says that she has heard that Darcy, her nephew, is planning to marry her. Since she considers a Bennet an unsuitable match for a Darcy, Lady Catherine demands that Elizabeth promise to refuse him. Elizabeth spiritedly refuses, saying she is not engaged to Darcy, but she will not promise anything against her own happiness. A little later, Elizabeth and Darcy go out walking together, and he tells her that his feelings have not altered since the spring. She tenderly accepts his proposal, and both Jane and Elizabeth are married.

Pre-reading activity

Every culture has its own legend or story of the tragedy of love. What story of the tragedy of love do you know from our culture?

Romeo and Juliet

William Shakespeare

In the streets of Verona, another fight breaks out between the servants of the feuding noble families of Capulet and Montague. Benvolio, a Montague, tries to stop the fighting, but Tybalt, a Capulet, arrives and escalates the conflict. The citizens, tired of the constant violence, break up the fight. Prince Escalus, Verona's ruler, declares that anyone who disturbs the peace again will be put to death.

Romeo, the son of Montague, meets his cousin Benvolio, who had seen Romeo moping earlier. Romeo confesses he is in love with Rosaline, who does not return his affection. Benvolio advises him to forget her and find someone else.

Meanwhile, Paris seeks Juliet's hand in marriage. Her father, Capulet, asks him to wait two years since Juliet is not yet fourteen. Capulet invites Paris to a feast he is hosting, hoping Paris will begin to win Juliet's heart.

Romeo and Benvolio encounter a Capulet servant with the guest list for the feast. Benvolio persuades Romeo to attend so he can compare Rosaline to other women. Romeo agrees only because he knows Rosaline will be there.

At the Capulet feast, Romeo sees Juliet and instantly falls in love, forgetting Rosaline. Tybalt recognizes Romeo and is enraged that a Montague has crashed the feast, but Capulet prevents Tybalt from attacking. Romeo and Juliet speak and learn each other's identities, causing them both distress.

After the feast, Romeo sneaks into the Capulet orchard and overhears Juliet, professing her love for him. They exchange vows of love and plan to marry in secret. The next day, Romeo and Juliet are married by Friar Lawrence, who hopes their union will end the feud between their families.

The next day, Tybalt challenges Romeo to a duel. Romeo, now Tybalt's kinsman by marriage, refuses to fight. Mercutio fights Tybalt instead and is killed. In a rage, Romeo kills Tybalt and flees. The Prince banishes Romeo from Verona.

Juliet learns of Tybalt’s death and Romeo’s banishment. Distraught, she decides her loyalty is to Romeo. Juliet’s father, unaware of her marriage, arranges for her to marry Paris in three days. Juliet seeks Friar Lawrence’s help. He gives her a potion that will make her appear dead. She is to be laid in the Capulet tomb, and Romeo will retrieve her so they can escape together.

Juliet takes the potion, and her family, believing her dead, lays her in the tomb. Friar Lawrence’s message to Romeo explaining the plan never reaches him. Romeo hears only that Juliet is dead. Devastated, he buys poison and returns to Verona.

At the tomb, Romeo encounters Paris, who mourns Juliet. They fight, and Romeo kills Paris. Romeo enters the tomb, sees Juliet’s lifeless body, and drinks the poison. Juliet awakens to find Romeo dead. Grief-stricken, she kills herself with Romeo’s dagger.

The watch arrives, followed by the Prince, the Capulets, and Montague. Montague reports that his wife has died of grief over Romeo’s exile. Seeing their dead children, Capulet and Montague agree to end their feud and raise gold statues of Romeo and Juliet side by side in a peaceful Verona.

Pre-reading activity

Literature often intends to provoke our imagination. Through the use of descriptive language, vivid imagery, and compelling narratives, literature stimulates our minds and encourages us to envision scenes, characters, and worlds beyond our immediate experience.

Have you ever read a novel that brings you to unimaginable creatures or settings?

Read the story.

The Little Prince Antoine de Saint-Exupéry

The narrator, an aeroplane pilot, crashes in the Sahara desert with limited food and water. As he worries, a little blond boy, the little prince, appears and asks him to draw a sheep. They become friends, and the pilot learns that the little prince is from a small planet called Asteroid B-612. The little prince took great care of his planet, especially preventing baobab trees from overrunning it. He loved a mysterious rose that appeared on his planet but left after feeling betrayed by her lie, seeking to cure his loneliness.

The little prince visits six asteroids, meeting a king, a vain man, a drunkard, a businessman, a lamplighter, and a geographer, all of whom are consumed by their occupations. These encounters puzzle and amuse the prince, who doesn't understand the adults' obsession with power, admiration, and ownership. He learns from the geographer that flowers are not eternal and begins to miss his rose. Following the geographer's advice, he visits Earth, landing in a desert. There, he meets a snake that hints it can help him return to the heavens and a three-petaled flower. He climbs a tall mountain, mistaking the echo of his voice for conversation.

Finding a rose garden depresses the prince because his rose had claimed to be unique. He befriends a fox who teaches him that the essential things in life are seen only with the heart and that his love makes his rose unique. This realization makes the prince feel responsible for his rose and intensifies his loneliness.

On the narrator's eighth day in the desert, they find a well, and the water nourishes their hearts and bodies. The little prince, longing to return to his rose, arranges with the snake to go back to his planet. The narrator fixes his plane on the eve of the prince's one-year anniversary on Earth. They walk to the prince's landing site, where the snake bites the prince, who falls silently.

The next day, the narrator finds nobody and takes comfort in believing the prince returned to his asteroid. He finds solace in the stars, hearing the prince's laughter, but also worries if the sheep he drew has eaten the prince's rose. The narrator ends by showing a drawing of the desert landscape, asking readers to notify him if they see the little prince.

GRAMMAR SECTION

What to discuss We are featuring two grammar materials in this chapter, i.e. phrasal verbs and relative clauses.

PHRASAL VERB

A phrasal verb is a combination of a verb and one or more particles (such as prepositions or adverbs) that together create a new meaning. This new meaning is often different from the meanings of the individual words. For example, "give up" means to quit or stop trying, which is different from "give" and "up" on their own. Phrasal verbs are very common in English and are important for speaking and understanding the language naturally.

Learning phrasal verbs can be difficult for people who are not native English speakers because their meanings can be hard to guess from the words alone. Some phrasal verbs can be separated by an object (like "turn off the light" or "turn the light off"), while others cannot be separated (like "look after someone"). Knowing how to use phrasal verbs correctly can help you speak and write English more fluently and make your communication clearer and more expressive.

Common Particles in Phrasal Verbs and Examples
Up	Wake up: to stop sleeping Clean up: to tidy or clean Give up: to stop trying
Out	Find out: to discover Run out: to exhaust the supply Take out: to remove
Off	Turn off: to switch off Take off: to leave the ground (in flight) Cut off: to disconnect or interrupt
In	Check-in: to register Fill in: to complete (a form) Bring in: to introduce Down	Break down: to stop working (machine) Cut down: to reduce

	Sit down: to take a seat
On	Put on: to dress oneself Turn on: to switch on Go on: to continue
Over	Look over: to review Run over: to hit with a vehicle Take over: to assume control
Back	Go back: to return Take back: to retrieve Come back: to return
About	Go about: to handle or tackle (a task) Bring about: to cause to happen Come about: to occur
After	Look after: to take care of Run after: to chase
Through	Go through: to experience Look through: to examine
Away	Throw away: to discard Run away: to escape

RELATIVE CLAUSE

A relative clause is a type of subordinate clause that provides additional information about a noun or pronoun in a sentence. It usually begins with a relative pronoun such as "who," "whom," "whose," "which," or "that." Relative clauses function as adjectives, describing or giving more detail about the noun they follow. For example, in the sentence "The book that I borrowed from the library is fascinating," the relative clause "that I borrowed from the library" specifies which book is being discussed.

Changing a relative clause into a participial phrase can make your sentences shorter and easier to read. A relative clause starts with words like "who," "which," or "that" and gives more information about a noun. To change it into a participial phrase, you remove these words and change the verb to its "-ing" form (present participle) for active actions or its past form (past participle) for passive actions.

For example, the sentence "The man who is talking to the teacher is my father" can be simplified to "The man talking to the teacher is my father." Another example is "The cake that was made by my sister is delicious," which can be shortened to "The cake made by my sister is delicious." This method helps make your writing clearer and more direct.

INFOGRAPHIC

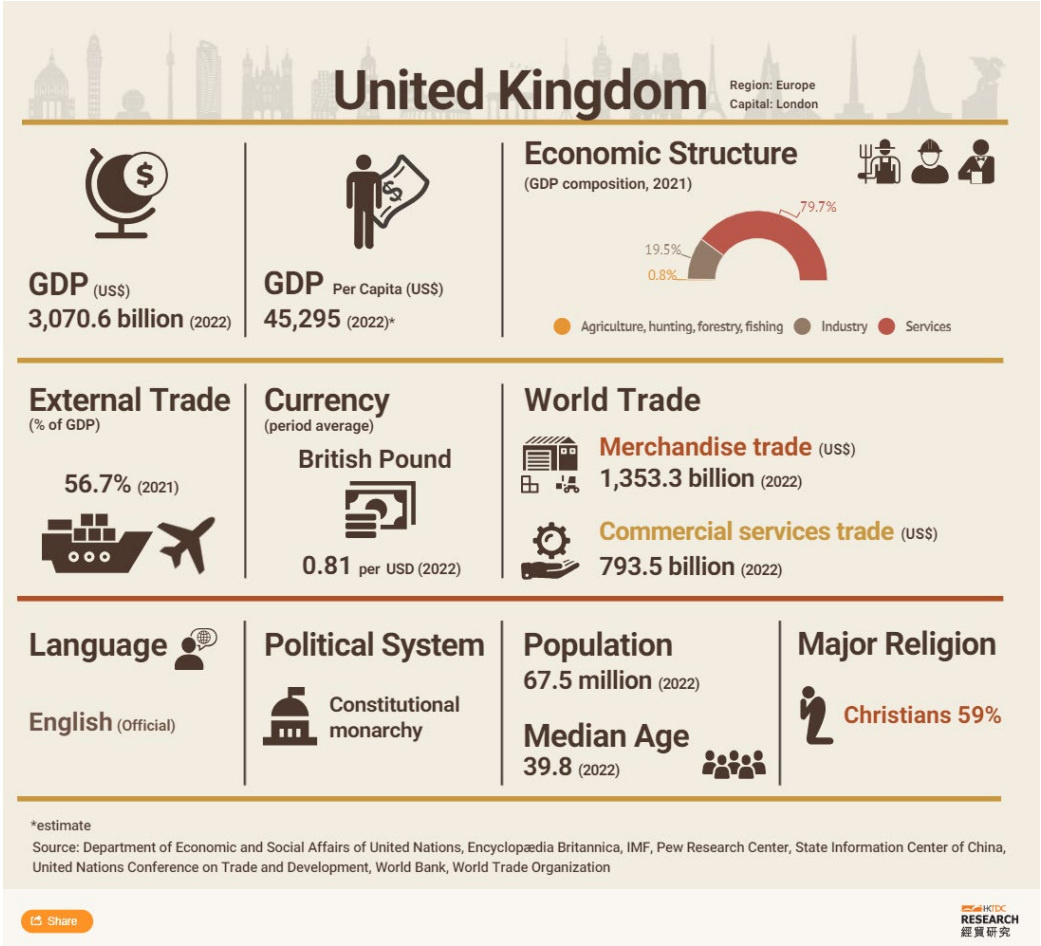

An infographic is a visual representation of information designed to make data easily understandable at a glance. It combines text, images, and design elements to present complex information quickly and clearly. The main parts of an infographic include the headline, which captures the main idea; the body, which contains the essential information; and visuals, such as charts, icons, and illustrations, that support and enhance the data. Additionally, infographics often have a clear structure with sections or categories to organize the content logically. They are widely used in various fields, including education, marketing, and journalism, to convey information in a visually engaging and informative way.

Task 7.2
Develop a paragraph about the data you find in the infographic. Observe the sample before you develop your own.

Observe this sample.

Title: The currency of Indonesia and the United Kingdom

Data 1: Indonesia uses the Indonesia Rupiah, and the United Kingdom uses the British Pound

Data 2: In 2022, 1 USD equals 14,849.85 IDR and 0.81 GBP

The paragraph:

The currency of Indonesia is the Indonesian Rupiah (IDR), and the currency of the United Kingdom is the British Pound (GBP). In 2022, the exchange rate showed that 1 US Dollar (USD) was equal to 14,849.85 Indonesian Rupiah, meaning the Rupiah has a lower value compared to the Dollar. On the other hand, 1 US Dollar was equal to 0.81 British Pounds, indicating that the Pound has a higher value. This big difference in exchange rates shows how the value of money can vary between Indonesia and the United Kingdom.

Technological change

More employers – 60% – expect broadening digital access to transform their business than any other trend, with similar proportions of employers across all regions selecting this trend. This growing digital access is a critical enabler for new technologies to transform labour markets

The Future of Jobs Survey asked employers how advances in nine key technologies are transforming their business. Of the nine technologies, three stand out as being expected to have the greatest impact. Robots and autonomous systems are expected to transform 58% of employers' businesses, while energy generation and storage technologies are expected to transform 41%. But it is artificial intelligence (AI) and information processing technologies that are expected to have the biggest impact – with 86% of respondents expecting these technologies to transform their business by 2030.

Generative AI (GenAI), in particular, has witnessed a rapid surge in both investment and adoption across various sectors. Since the release of Chat GPT in November 2022, investment flows into AI have increased nearly eightfold. This influx of capital has been accompanied by investment in the physical infrastructure needed to support these emerging technologies, including servers and energy generation plants. By leveraging natural language processing technology, GenAI enables users to interact with it as though they were conversing with a human, considerably reducing barriers to usage and the need for specialized technical knowledge. Accordingly, the demand for GenAI skills by both businesses and individuals has also grown significantly.

Although more generalized adoption of AI applications remains comparatively low, with only a small fraction of firms using it in 2023, adoption is growing rapidly, albeit unevenly across sectors. The information technology sector is leading the way in AI adoption, while industries such as construction are lagging behind. This disparity mirrors broader trends, with advanced and middle-income economies experiencing unprecedented diffusion of generative AI technologies among individual users, while low-income economies remain largely on the margins, with currently minimal use of this technology.

While the full extent of long-term productivity gains from the technology remains uncertain, workplace studies have identified various initial ways for generative AI to enhance human skills and performance. Some of these studies have highlighted ways for generative AI to enhance human core skills, or to substitute for tacit knowledge among newer or average performing workers. Other studies have shown generative AI can enhance knowledge work if applied appropriately within its capability, but risks producing adverse outcomes where users unknowingly stretch it beyond its capability.

Looking further ahead, some observers argue generative AI could empower less specialized employees to perform a greater range of "expert" tasks – expanding the possible functions of roles such as Accounting Clerks, Nurses, and Teaching Assistants. Similarly, the technology could equip skilled professionals such as Electricians, Doctors or Engineers with the world's forefront knowledge – enabling them to solve complex problems more efficiently. Outcomes such as these – which create genuine shifts in the quantity or quality of output – are more likely to come about if technology development is focused on enhancing rather than substituting for human capabilities. However, without appropriate decision-making frameworks, economic incentive structures and, possibly, government regulations, there remains a risk that technological development will be focused on replacing human work, which could increase inequality and unemployment.

Task 7.3
Can You Tell which sentences are True or False
based on the text?

1. (___) Artificial intelligence and information processing technologies are expected to transform 86% of employers' businesses by 2030.
2. (___) Semiconductors and computing technologies are considered more transformational than new materials and composites.
3. (___) Digital access is considered a key enabler that allows new technologies to transform labor markets.
4. (___) Energy generation, storage, and distribution technologies are expected to transform more than half of employers' businesses.
5. (___) AI adoption is currently equal across all sectors, including IT and construction.
6. (___) Generative AI may empower less specialized workers to perform expert tasks.
7. (___) Without the right frameworks, AI development could increase inequality and unemployment.
8. (___) Since the release of ChatGPT, investment in AI has almost tripled across industries.
9. (___) Sensing, laser, and optical technologies are expected to transform more businesses than biotechnology and gene technologies.
10. (___) One benefit of generative AI is its ability to reduce the need for specialized technical knowledge.

1. AI and information processing technologies are expected to _____ 86% of employers' businesses by 2030.
2. Robots and _____ systems are projected to significantly influence business transformation across sectors.
3. The rapid _____ of generative AI is especially notable in advanced economies, while low-income regions lag behind.
4. Since the release of ChatGPT, investment in AI and supporting _____ has surged.
5. _____ AI, such as ChatGPT, has lowered technical barriers by enabling natural language interactions.
6. Despite growing interest, actual business _____ of AI in 2023 remains relatively low and uneven across industries.
7. Studies show generative AI can enhance human _____ when used appropriately—but may fail if stretched beyond limits.
8. Worries persist that without proper regulation, employers may focus on _____ human workers instead of complementing them.
9. Technological change could increase _____ if not guided by fair policies and decision-making structures.
10. Providing training and opportunities to upskill could serve as an effective _____ for broader AI integration.

TASK 7.5
Read the statements and respond to the reflection prompts. Support your answers with ideas from the graph and reading text. Write your responses in 3–5 sentences each.

1. Do you believe the rapid growth of generative AI will benefit all types of workers equally? Why or why not?

Hint: Consider the differences in adoption across sectors and income levels.

2. Some people worry that AI might replace humans in many jobs. Others believe it will enhance what humans can do. Which side do you agree with more? Explain your reasoning.

Hint: Refer to examples in the text about clerks, nurses, or electricians.

3. What responsibilities do governments and employers have in managing the effects of AI in the workplace?

Hint: Think about regulation, training, or economic incentives mentioned in the text.

4. Imagine your future career. In what ways do you think AI could help or challenge you? What skills should you start building now?

Hint: Reflect on both opportunities and risks described in the text.

Pre-reading activity

Do you know the difference between data, information, and opinion?

In our digital age, we are surrounded by facts, figures, and stories. But before we can make sense of them, it is important to understand the difference between data, information, and opinion—three terms that are often confused but serve very different purposes.

Data refers to raw, unprocessed facts. These can come in the form of numbers, words, sounds, or images. On its own, data doesn't tell us much. For example, seeing the number "85" doesn't mean anything unless we know what it's measuring. Is it a score? A temperature? A percentage? That's where information comes in. Information is what we get when data is processed, organized, or interpreted in a meaningful way. When we say "85% of students prefer studying at night," the number 85 becomes more than just a number—it becomes information, because it now has context and can help us understand a situation or make a decision.

Opinion, however, is different. Opinion is a personal interpretation or judgment based on information or even assumptions. It may be influenced by someone's beliefs, experiences, or biases. For example, if someone sees the data "85% of students study at night" and says, "Students today are lazy and irresponsible," that is an opinion—not information. It reflects the speaker's interpretation, not a verified fact.

Understanding these differences is crucial. While data and information help us build knowledge and make informed decisions, opinions remind us that people can look at the same information and come to very different conclusions. This means we need to think critically, ask questions, and be aware of how information is presented to us. Headlines, advertisements, and even social media posts may use true data but spin it into emotional or misleading messages based on opinion.

In short, data becomes information when it is given context, and information becomes opinion when someone adds their own judgment. Learning to separate these will make you a more informed, thoughtful, and responsible reader in today's fast-moving world.

Observe this data and how the text makes them into information.

The line graph shows the number of books that were borrowed in four different months in 2014 from four village libraries, and the pie chart shows the percentage of books, by type, that were borrowed over this time.

The line graph depicts the number of books that were loaned out from four libraries over a four-month period, and the pie chart illustrates the proportions of books borrowed in terms of genre. It is immediately apparent that the borrowing patterns for each library were quite varied and that fiction was by far the most popular type of book.

The borrowing of books at Sutton Wood and Ryeslip began fairly high, at 250 and 300 per month in June, respectively. However, while book borrowing at Ryeslip fell steadily to around 175 at the end of the period, borrowing at Sutton Wood followed a much more erratic pattern. It plummeted to 100 in August, before then rising steeply to finish at 300, which represented the highest level of borrowing of the four.

Borrowing at West Eaton and Church Mount, meanwhile, followed very similar patterns, with both starting quite low at 50 per month but then gradually increasing to finish at 150.

Moving on to the types of books borrowed, fiction was in demand the most, at 43%. The next most popular books were biographies, accounting for around a fifth of the total. The borrowing of science and history were identical, at 14% each, leaving self-help as the least popular at 10%.

Task 7.6
Provide synonyms to the keywords from the text.

1. depicts _____
2. illustrates _____
3. apparent _____
4. fairly high _____
5. erratic pattern _____
6. plummeted _____
7. rising steeply _____
8. accounting for _____
9. the least popular _____

Task 7.7
Choose the correct answer.

1. What information does the pie chart provide about the types of books borrowed?
 - a. The popularity of different book genres.
 - b. The number of books borrowed from each library.
 - c. The overall trend in book borrowing over time.
 - d. The proportion of fiction and non-fiction books.
2. According to the line graph, which library had the steadiest increase in book borrowing over the four-month period?
 - b. Sutton Wood
 - c. Ryeslip
 - d. West Eaton
 - e. Church Mount
3. What can be inferred about the reading preferences of the library patrons from the information given?
 - a. They prefer non-fiction books over fiction.
 - b. They have a diverse range of reading interests.
 - c. They borrow more books during the summer months.
 - d. They tend to borrow the same types of books each month.
4. If the total number of books borrowed across all four libraries was 1000, approximately how many were biographies?
 - a. 100
 - b. 140
 - c. 200
 - d. 430
5. Which library experienced the most significant fluctuation in book borrowing over the four-month period?
 - a. Sutton Wood
 - b. Ryeslip
 - c. West Eaton
 - d. Church Mount
6. Based on the information provided, which statement is most accurate?
 - a. Fiction books were the least popular genre.
 - b. Borrowing patterns were consistent across all four libraries.
 - c. Science and history books were equally popular.
 - d. Borrowing levels increased over the four-month period.
7. What is the most likely reason for the similar borrowing patterns observed at West Eaton and Church Mount?

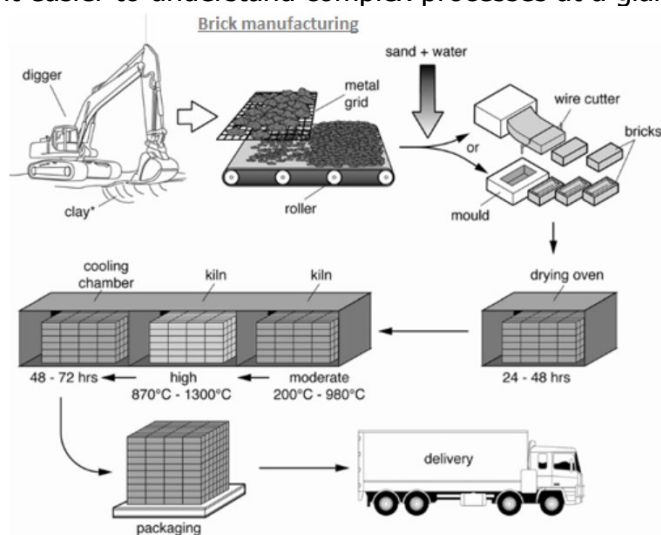

- The libraries are located in the same geographic region.
- They have the same collection of books available.
- They cater to a similar demographic of library patrons.
- They implemented the same marketing strategies to promote borrowing.

Read the diagram and the accompanying text.

Data can also be presented in the form of a flowchart diagram. A flowchart diagram is a visual representation of a process or workflow, illustrating the steps or actions needed to complete a particular task or procedure. It uses standardized symbols to represent different types of actions, decisions, and flow of control, making it easier to understand complex processes at a glance.

The diagram above shows the process by which bricks are manufactured for the building industry.

The diagram shows the different stages of brick manufacturing in the building industry. Generally speaking, brick production involves 7 steps, starting from the digging stages and ending at the delivery stage.

As is given in the graph, the first step of brick manufacturing is digging the clay with a large digger. This clay is then filtered and processed in a roller machine and then mixed with sand and water. In the third stage, the mixture is either kept in a mould or cut in a wire cutter to make the raw shape of the bricks. In the next step, the shaped raw bricks are dried for 24 to 48 hours in a drying oven. After that, the dried raw bricks are kept in a kiln, both at moderate and high temperatures, up to 1300 degrees centigrade and then placed in a cooling chamber for about 48 to 72 hours. This process makes the brick to be packed and delivered in the final two steps. The delivery process is the final process of brick manufacturing, and as it is noted, brick-making is a moderately complex process that requires some predefined works to make it usable.

GRAMMAR SECTION

What to discuss	This chapter also discusses connectives. Connectives are words or phrases used to link sentences or parts of sentences together, making the passage more cohesive and coherent. They help to show the relationship between ideas and ensure the smooth flow of information. Connectives can indicate various relationships. This chapter will cover connectives in the context of addition, contrast and cause and effect.
Here is a list of common connectives and the categories to which they belong.	To add:	and, again, and then, besides, equally important, finally, further, furthermore, nor, too, next, lastly, what's more, moreover, in addition, first (second, etc.)
	To contrast	whereas, but, yet, on the other hand, however, nevertheless, on the contrary, by comparison, where, compared to, up against, balanced against, vis a vis, but, although, conversely, meanwhile, after all, in contrast, although this may be true
	To show cause and effect	because, for, since, for the same reason, evidently, thus, therefore, hence

Understanding "Because," "As," and "Since" as Connectives of Reason

The connectives "because," "as," and "since" are commonly used to explain reasons or causes in sentences. While they often function similarly, each carries subtle differences in tone and usage.

"Because" is the most direct and explicit way to indicate a reason. It is commonly used in both spoken and written English to provide a clear cause-and-effect relationship.

Example: "She stayed home because she was feeling sick."
This structure makes the reason clear and unambiguous.

"As" and "since" are more formal and may express reasons in a subtler way.

"As" often implies that two actions are happening simultaneously or that one causes the other in a smoother, less forceful manner.

Example: "As it was raining, we cancelled the picnic."
Here, the rain is the cause, but the tone is more neutral than with "because."

“Since” can also indicate a reason, much like “because,” but it uniquely carries the additional function of referring to the passage of time.

Example (reason): “Since you’re already here, let’s get started.”

Example (time): “Since he moved to the city, he has been very busy.”

Although “because,” “as,” and “since” can often be used interchangeably to indicate reasons, their nuances matter.

“Because” is the clearest for expressing cause. “As” is more formal and slightly softer in tone. “Since” can mean either

Compare the following:

- “He went to bed early because he was tired.”
- “He went to bed early as he was tired.”
- “He went to bed early since he was tired.”

All express the same cause, but “because” is more direct, “as” more formal, and “since” could imply either reason or time, depending on the context.

In summary, “because” is straightforward, “as” adds formality or simultaneity, and “since” can imply both reason and time.

Choosing between them depends on the tone, formality, and clarity you wish to convey.

EXPOSITION
TEXT

This part explores exposition texts. Knapp & Watkins (2005) define exposition text as a text type which clearly focuses on the purpose of argument; that is, putting forward a viewpoint and providing evidence to support it.

There are three parts of an exposition text:

Thesis statement	This is a clear statement of the main idea or argument of the text. It tells what the whole text will be about.
Arguments	The reasons, evidence, and examples that support the thesis statement. They are presented in the body paragraphs of the text.
Reiteration	Restatement and reinforcement of the thesis statement at the end of the text.

Pre-reading activity

An exposition text explains, informs, or persuades readers about a specific topic. It starts with a thesis statement, which is the main idea. Then, it provides arguments and evidence to support the thesis. The text ends with a reiteration that restates the thesis statement and summarizes the main points. Exposition texts help readers understand complex subjects, encourage critical thinking, and support education. Examples include scientific articles, essays, instructional manuals, and news articles. They are important because they make complicated ideas clear and help people learn new information.

Read this sample of exposition text.

MALARIA – One of The Oldest Disease

Malaria, an ancient disease transmitted by Anopheles mosquitoes, poses a significant threat, especially in Sub-Saharan Africa, where it claims the lives of hundreds of thousands annually. While treatment programs exist, prevention strategies are paramount to reducing its impact.

The focus on treatment over prevention has hindered long-term success in combatting malaria, as evidenced by the failure of WHO's Global Malaria Eradication Programme due to uniform strategies that neglected regional disparities in infrastructure and resources. Moreover, the widespread use of chloroquine has led to drug-resistant parasites, exacerbating the issue and necessitating costlier treatments, further straining limited resources in Sub-Saharan Africa.

In contrast, prioritizing prevention can be more effective and affordable, with insecticide-treated bed nets (ITNs) serving as a prime example. These nets create a protective barrier against mosquitoes, significantly reducing transmission rates and saving lives, particularly among vulnerable populations. The implementation of ITNs not only mitigates health risks but also addresses socioeconomic challenges by minimizing loss of productivity due to illness and reducing healthcare expenditures for affected families.

By shifting the focus from treatment to prevention, particularly through initiatives like ITN distribution, Sub-Saharan Africa can significantly alleviate the burden of malaria, fostering healthier communities and bolstering economic development in the region.

Check the text again. Do as instructed.

1. Underline the thesis statement, arguments, and reiteration part of the passage. Then, answer the question to explore parts of the exposition text.

2. What is the main message that the writer wants the readers to understand from the passage?

This main message is usually called a thesis statement.

3. What are two arguments that the writer puts forward to support the thesis statement?

The argument to support why we need to prevent _____

The argument to explain the alternative to prevention _____

This argument is a counterargument. It is different viewpoints that make the previous argument stronger.

Task 8.2
Can You Tell which sentences are True (T) and False (F)?

1. (____) Malaria is transmitted through the bite of Anopheles mosquitoes.
2. (____) Malaria kills hundreds of thousands of people each year.
3. (____) The text argues that treatment is more effective than prevention in fighting malaria.
4. (____) WHO's Global Malaria Eradication Programme failed because it didn't consider regional differences.
5. (____) Chloroquine remains highly effective in treating all forms of malaria today.
6. (____) Insecticide-treated bed nets reduce malaria transmission and help protect vulnerable groups.
7. (____) Remote populations benefit the most from ITNs.
8. (____) Focusing on prevention strategies can significantly reduce the malaria burden in Sub-Saharan Africa.

Video games are good for you!

For years, video games have been criticized for making people antisocial, overweight, or depressed. However, researchers are now discovering that games can actually improve both our body and mind.

Video games can help develop physical skills. Preschool children who played interactive games, like those on the Wii, showed better motor skills, such as kicking, catching, and throwing a ball, compared to children who didn't play video games. A study of Boston surgeons found that those who played video games were 27% faster and made 37% fewer errors in microsurgery than those who didn't play. Video games also enhance vision, particularly in distinguishing between shades of grey, which is useful for tasks like driving at night, piloting a plane, or reading X-rays.

Games benefit various brain functions, including decision-making. People who play action-based games make decisions 25% faster without sacrificing accuracy. Top gamers can make and act on choices up to six times a second, four times faster than most people. Researchers from the University of Rochester found that experienced gamers could pay attention to more than six things at once without confusion, compared to the usual four. Video games can also reduce gender differences in spatial skills; women who play games are better at mentally manipulating 3D objects.

There is also evidence that gaming can help with psychological problems. At the University of Auckland, researchers asked 94 young people with depression to play a 3D fantasy game called SPARX. The game reduced symptoms of depression more effectively than conventional treatments in many cases. Another team at Oxford University found that playing Tetris shortly after a traumatic experience could prevent disturbing flashbacks.

However, the effects of gaming are not always positive. Indiana University researchers found that violent games could alter brain function in young men after just a week, affecting areas related to emotional control and increasing aggressive behaviour. Despite this, Daphne Bavelier, a leading researcher, suggests that violent action games might have the most substantial beneficial effects on the brain.

In the future, video games could play a significant role in treatments for physical and neurological problems, incorporating their beneficial aspects for overall health improvement.

Adapted from British Council (2024)

Task 8.3
Choose the correct answer based on the passage.

1. According to the passage, how do video games help surgeons improve their performance?
 - a. Video games make surgeons 27% faster and reduce errors by 37% in microsurgery.
 - b. Video games have no impact on surgical performance.
 - c. Video games make surgeons slower but reduce errors in microsurgery.
 - d. Video games help surgeons develop better hand-eye coordination.

2. What is the main argument against violent video games presented in the passage?
 - a. Violent games can alter brain function and increase aggressive behaviour.
 - b. Violent games have no positive effects on the brain.
 - c. Violent games are more addictive than non-violent games.
 - d. Violent games can lead to physical health problems.
3. According to the passage, how do video games benefit women's spatial skills?
 - a. Video games reduce gender differences in spatial abilities.
 - b. Video games help women develop better depth perception.
 - c. Video games improve women's visual attention and multitasking.
 - d. Video games have no impact on gender differences in spatial skills.
4. What is the main conclusion drawn in the passage about the future of video games?
 - a. Video games will continue to be criticized for their negative effects.
 - b. Video games will play a significant role in treatments for physical and neurological problems.
 - c. The benefits of video games will be outweighed by their negative consequences.
 - d. Video games will become less popular as people become more aware of their drawbacks.
5. According to the passage, how do video games enhance vision?
 - a. They help distinguish between shades of grey.
 - b. They improve depth perception.
 - c. They increase contrast sensitivity.
 - d. They improve peripheral vision.

Creativity is Not Enough in the Modern World

In the modern world, success is often equated with wealth and fame. While many successful people, like Steve Jobs of Apple, have been highly creative, creativity alone does not guarantee success. Achieving goals also requires hard work, opportunities, and leadership qualities.

First, creativity without hard work leads to a dead end. Steve Jobs, known for his creativity, was also an exceptionally hard worker. In an interview in his 30s, Jobs mentioned that he only slept four hours a night, spending the rest of his time working and researching. His relentless hard work, alongside his creativity, was crucial in shaping his successful career.

Second, creativity without opportunities will not lead to success. Many talented artists create great works but still struggle to find opportunities. For instance, visiting Clarion Alley Street Art in San Francisco reveals many creative artworks by street artists. One local artist interviewed by NBC Bay Area mentioned working hard to showcase his work on the streets while aiming to display it worldwide to earn money and improve his life. This scenario is common among creative individuals who need opportunities to succeed. Vincent Van Gogh, a favourite among art enthusiasts, spent his life painting and struggling to sell his works. His career only took off when his works were exhibited in Paris and Brussels.

Lastly, many successful figures are recognized more for their leadership abilities than their creativity. Billionaire Warren Buffett is one such example. Known for his exceptional leadership, Buffett often turned crises into opportunities for profit. According to Business Insider, in the early 60s, Buffett made a bold decision to invest in American Express, acquiring 5% of the company. This move, initially worth $60 million, turned into half a billion by 2016. His leadership was instrumental in his overall success.

In conclusion, while creativity is a valuable asset, it is not sufficient on its own to achieve success. Hard work, seizing opportunities, and strong leadership are essential components that, together with creativity, pave the way to reaching one's goals.

Task 8.5
Answer the questions
based on the passage

1. What is commonly associated with success in today's world?

2. According to the passage, what other qualities are needed to achieve success besides creativity?

3. How did Steve Jobs' work habits contribute to his success?

A Healthy Aging Society in Japan

In June 2018, while visiting Tokyo, I observed a significant number of elderly individuals actively participating in city life. This observation prompted me to explore why Japan boasts such a high life expectancy. Unlike Thailand, where centenarians are rare, it is common in Japan to see individuals over 100 years old still leading active lives. Marmot and Smith (1989) attribute Japanese longevity to an effective public welfare system and a healthy diet. This article delves deeper into the public welfare issues that contribute to Japan's demographic patterns, which pose chronic challenges.

One reason behind Japan's low GDP growth rate over the past decade is the high rate of social security taxation, which stands at approximately 30% of income. A decade ago, this rate was around 25%. The government collects these taxes to fund social welfare programs and public benefits, which aim to improve the general populace's well-being. Government spending relative to GDP has reached 40%, placing a significant burden on current taxpayers. In Japan's ageing society, where birth rates are low and mortality rates high, the labour force is shrinking, and the proportion of elderly citizens is growing.

Due to this demographic shift and taxation burden, future generations will face high tax rates as they support an increasing number of elderly citizens. This situation means current and future workers will be worse off while retirees enjoy government support. The high cost of living in Japan exacerbates this issue, as working individuals must support both their families and the elderly population, which now outnumbers the labour force.

Looking ahead, Japan's population is expected to continue shrinking due to a negative growth rate. The high cost of living and high taxes reduce disposable income, making it financially challenging for families to afford children. Without intervention from policymakers, the trend of a declining birth rate will persist, exacerbating the country's economic burden. Additionally, Japan's significant public debt and deficit spending highlight the insufficiency of current tax revenues to support the ageing population.

To address these challenges and restore Japan's economic vitality, several strategies could be implemented. These include offering financial incentives to encourage higher birth rates, reforming pension fund ratios, or extending the retirement age. Given the high cost of raising a child in Japan, the government's financial support for education and other expenses could help increase the population and develop skilled labour to replace the current workforce.

In summary, while Japan has made significant strides in maintaining its population, it faces a looming crisis that demands efficient management of human capital. Breaking this cycle is crucial to steering the country towards a more sustainable future. If left unaddressed, the current trajectory could lead to severe economic and societal challenges.

Task 8.7

main ideas of each paragraph. Put them in the correct order

1. (___) Impact on Future Generations
2. (___) Observation of the Elderly in Tokyo
3. (___) Need for Efficient Management
4. (___) Economic Burden
5. (___) High Social Security Taxes

based on the passage.

Task 8.8
Answer the questions based on the text.

6. (____) Population Decline
1. What factors contribute to Japan's high life expectancy, according to Marmot and Smith (1989)?

2. How has the social security taxation rate in Japan changed over the past decade?

3. What does it mean by 'the labour force is shrinking'?

4. Why is the shrinking labour force in Japan a concern for future generations?

5. What are some potential consequences of Japan's declining birth rate?

6. What strategies could be implemented to address Japan's economic challenges related to its ageing population?

GRAMMAR SECTION

What to discuss This chapter discusses future tenses in the context of simple future, future progressive, and future perfect tenses.

When we talk about the future in English, we use three main ways: simple future, future progressive, and future perfect. Each way helps us say different things about what will happen later. The simple future uses "will" or "be going to", followed by the base form of the verb to predict or promise future events, like "I will go to the store tomorrow." The future progressive shows ongoing actions in the future, with "will" or "shall" + "be" + the -ing form of the verb, such as "I will be studying for my exam at this time tomorrow." Lastly, the future perfect talks about actions finished before a future time, made with "will" or "shall" + "have" + the past participle, like "By the time you arrive, I will have finished my work."

Even though these ways have different purposes, they help us talk about future events clearly. The simple future talks about general future actions or decisions, the future progressive talks about ongoing activities at specific future times, and the future perfect talks about actions finished before specific future points.

Simple future tense

Sample:

- can be used with or without an exact time
- is used for actions that are less likely.
- I will work tomorrow if I feel better.
- She will attend the meeting.

Future Progressive tense

Sample:

- is usually used with a specified period of time
- to show more certainty than the simple future tense does.
- to describe multiple future actions happening at the same time
- to describe a future action interrupted by another action
- I will be working as a sales assistant from November to December.
- She will be speaking in the auditorium this evening.

Future perfect tense

Sample:

- talk about something that will be completed before a specific time in the future.
- can use phrases like by or by the time (meaning 'at some point before') and in (like in a day's time / in two months' time / in five years' time, etc. - meaning 'at the end of this period') to give the time period in which the action will be completed.
- The guests are coming at 8 p.m. I'll have finished cooking by then.
- On 9 October, we'll have been married for 50 years.
- Will you have gone to bed when I get back?

In addition to using "will," there are several other ways to express future actions or events in English.

Be Going To

- Planned Actions: Used for plans or intentions decided before the moment of speaking.
Example: "I'm going to visit my grandmother next weekend."
- Predictions Based on Evidence: Used for predictions when there is present evidence.
Example: "Look at those dark clouds. It is going to rain."

Present Continuous (Present Progressive)

- Arrangements or Plans: Used for definite future arrangements or plans, especially when a specific time is mentioned.
Example: "I am meeting my friends for dinner tonight."

Simple Present

- Scheduled Events: Used for timetables, schedules, and fixed events.

Example: "The train leaves at 6 p.m."

Task 8.9
Fill in the blanks with either "will" or "be going to" to complete each sentence correctly.

1. Look at those dark clouds. It _____ (rain) soon.
2. I just realized I'm out of milk. I _____ (go) to the store to get some.
3. She _____ (start) a new job next Monday. She got the offer last week.

DISCUSSION TEXT

This chapter discusses the discussion text. While the purpose of an exposition is to present one viewpoint, a discussion text is a more sophisticated text as it involves the consideration of an issue from a number of perspectives. Discussion texts generally consist of statements for and against (Knapp & Watkins, 2005).

Many essay titles ask you to look at both sides of a situation and then decide which side you prefer. These essays are called discussion or for-and-against essays. In this way, the word "discuss" in academic writing is like its everyday use, where two people talk about a topic from different sides. In a discussion essay, it is important to present a balanced view. This is different from analytical or hortatory essays, where you only give one side of the argument. When writing a discussion essay, you need to clearly separate facts and opinions. You will often look at what other people have said about the topic and include their ideas by paraphrasing and summarizing with proper citations.

Pre-reading activity

A structure of a discussion text:

- Introduction: provide a general statement, state both points of view, make a thesis statement and outline your sentence. If you develop an essay as a part of a task, paraphrase the task here.
- Main body paragraph 1: state the first viewpoint, discuss it, state whether you agree or disagree and give an example to support your view.
- Main body paragraph 2: state the second viewpoint, discuss it, state whether you agree or disagree and give an example to support your view.
- Conclusion: summarise and state which viewpoint is better or more important.

The Importance and Popularity of Web-Based Language Learning Applications

Web-based language learning applications have gained immense popularity and offer numerous benefits. However, they also face limitations and criticisms that must be addressed to ensure their effectiveness in language education. This article will explore the benefits and limitations of web-based language learning applications.

Despite their popularity and convenience, web-based language learning applications also face certain limitations and criticisms. One common concern is the lack of human interaction and personalized feedback provided by traditional language classes. While apps may offer automated feedback and correction features, they cannot replicate the immersive learning environment and real-time interaction with instructors and peers found in traditional classrooms. Furthermore, some users may struggle with self-discipline and motivation when learning languages independently through apps, leading to inconsistent study habits and slower progress. Additionally, the quality and accuracy of content provided by language learning apps can vary significantly, raising questions about the reliability of these platforms for language acquisition.

On the positive side, web-based language learning applications have democratized access to language education, allowing individuals from diverse backgrounds and geographical locations to learn new languages at their own pace and convenience. This accessibility has been particularly beneficial for individuals living in remote areas with limited access to traditional language learning resources. Moreover, the gamification elements and interactive features found in many language learning apps have been effective in engaging younger learners and maintaining their interest and motivation in language study. Additionally, the vast array of languages offered by these apps caters to the diverse linguistic needs and interests of users worldwide, making language learning more inclusive and accessible to all.

Despite the numerous advantages offered by web-based language learning applications, it is essential to recognize their limitations and potential drawbacks. While these apps can be effective supplementary tools for language learning, they should not replace traditional language instruction entirely, especially for individuals seeking proficiency in a foreign language for academic or professional purposes. Additionally, users should approach language learning apps with a critical mindset, carefully evaluating the quality and credibility of content before relying on them as primary learning resources. Furthermore, educators and language experts should work collaboratively with app developers to enhance the effectiveness and pedagogical value of web-based language learning applications, ensuring that they align with best practices in language education and meet the diverse needs of learners worldwide.

Task 9.1
Choose the correct
answer.

1. Which of the following is a common criticism of web-based language learning applications?
 - a. They are too expensive for most users.
 - b. They require a high level of technical skills.
 - c. They lack personalized feedback and human interaction.
 - d. They do not offer a wide range of language options.
2. What is one of the key benefits of web-based language learning applications?
 - a. They provide a more challenging and competitive learning environment.
 - b. They allow for more face-to-face interaction with language instructors.
 - c. They offer language education to individuals in diverse locations.
 - d. They are more affordable than traditional language classes.
3. Which feature of language learning apps helps to engage younger learners?
 - a. The availability of advanced-level content.
 - b. The inclusion of gamification elements and interactive features.
 - c. The opportunity to practice with native speakers online.
 - d. The ability to customize the learning pace and schedule.
4. What should users do when relying on web-based language learning applications as a primary resource?
 - a. Approach them with an uncritical mindset.
 - b. Assume the content is always accurate and reliable.
 - c. Disregard any concerns about the quality of the content.
 - d. Evaluate the quality and credibility of the content critically.

5. According to the passage, how should web-based language learning applications be used?
 - a. They should replace traditional language instruction entirely.
 - b. They should be the sole resource for language acquisition.
 - c. They should be used as supplementary tools, not a replacement for traditional instruction.
 - d. They should be avoided, as they have more drawbacks than benefits.
6. What should educators and language experts do to improve the effectiveness of web-based language learning applications?
 - a. Develop their own competing web-based language learning apps.
 - b. Ignore the limitations of web-based language learning apps.
 - c. Collaborate with app developers to enhance the pedagogical value.
 - d. Discourage the use of web-based language learning applications.
7. What is the main message conveyed in the passage?
 - a. Web-based language learning applications are the future of language education.
 - b. Traditional language instruction is superior to web-based language learning applications.
 - c. Web-based language learning applications have both benefits and limitations that need to be addressed.
 - d. Web-based language learning applications are not suitable for language learning at all.

What are "argument for," "argument against," and "counterargument"?

1. Argument For:

- Meaning: An "argument for" is a reason or set of reasons presented in support of a particular idea or proposition. It highlights the benefits, advantages, or positive aspects of the topic.
- Example: If the topic is "Should schools implement uniform policies?" an argument for might be that uniforms can reduce peer pressure among students regarding clothing choices.

2. Argument Against:

- Meaning: An "argument against" is a reason or set of reasons presented to oppose a particular idea or proposition. It emphasizes the drawbacks, disadvantages, or negative aspects of the topic.
- Example: For the same topic on school uniforms, an argument against might be that uniforms limit students' freedom of expression and individuality.

3. Counterargument:

- Meaning: A "counterargument" is an argument made to address or refute a specific point raised in the opposing argument. It acknowledges the opposing view but provides reasons or evidence to demonstrate why that view may be flawed or less compelling.
- Example: In response to the argument against school uniforms, a counterargument might be that while uniforms limit expression, they can enhance school spirit and unity, which is also valuable.

In summary, "argument for" supports a position, "argument against" opposes it, and "counterargument" responds to and refutes an opposing argument.

Globally or Nationally to Tackle Environmental Problems?

The debate on whether environmental problems should be tackled globally or nationally is increasingly relevant as the world faces significant ecological challenges. Both perspectives offer valuable insights and strategies for addressing environmental issues. This discussion will explore the arguments for and against both global and national approaches to tackling environmental problems, highlighting the strengths and limitations of each.

Proponents of a global approach argue that environmental issues such as climate change, pollution, and biodiversity loss are inherently global problems that transcend national borders. They believe that coordinated international efforts are crucial because the actions of one country can significantly impact others. For instance, greenhouse gas emissions from industrialized nations contribute to global warming, affecting weather patterns and sea levels worldwide. Therefore, global cooperation through treaties and agreements, such as the Paris Agreement, is seen as essential for effectively addressing these problems.

On the other hand, some argue that tackling environmental problems at the national level is more practical and effective. They contend that individual countries have unique environmental issues and economic circumstances that require tailored solutions. National governments are better positioned to understand their specific environmental challenges and can implement policies that are more directly suited to their contexts. For example, a country with extensive forest coverage might focus on combating deforestation, while an industrialized nation might prioritize reducing air pollution from factories. Additionally, national policies can be more swiftly enacted and enforced compared to international agreements, which often require lengthy negotiations and consensus-building among many countries.

Critics of the global approach highlight several limitations and challenges. International agreements can be difficult to enforce, as there is no overarching authority with the power to impose penalties on countries that fail to meet their commitments. This lack of enforcement can lead to non-compliance or half-hearted participation. Moreover, global initiatives may not account for the diverse economic and social contexts of different countries, leading to solutions that are either too broad or not feasible for some nations to implement. For instance, developing countries might struggle to meet the same environmental standards as wealthier nations due to limited resources and technological capabilities.

The Value of Learning a Foreign Language in Education

The debate over whether learning a foreign language is an essential part of a child's education or a dispensable activity that could be replaced by more vocational subjects like technology is a contentious one. This discussion will explore both perspectives, weighing the benefits and drawbacks of foreign language learning in the context of modern education.

Supporters of foreign language learning contend that it provides significant cognitive advantages and enhances a child's educational experience. Learning a new language improves memory, problem-solving skills, and critical thinking. Research has shown that bilingual individuals often have better attention spans and can switch between tasks more efficiently than monolinguals. Additionally, learning a foreign language exposes children to different cultures and ways of thinking, fostering empathy and global awareness. These skills and insights can be valuable in an increasingly interconnected world where cultural sensitivity and communication are essential.

Conversely, critics argue that the emphasis on foreign language learning can detract from more practical subjects that are directly relevant to the job market. In today's technology-driven world, skills in areas such as computer science, engineering, and vocational training are in high demand. By focusing on these subjects, children can develop expertise that will make them more competitive in the workforce. Critics also point out that not every student will have the opportunity to use a foreign language in their future careers, making the time spent learning it seem like a less efficient use of educational resources. They believe that education should prioritize skills that offer immediate and tangible benefits.

Moreover, the time and resources dedicated to foreign language education could be reallocated to subjects that provide more direct economic advantages. For instance, proficiency in technology-related fields can lead to high-paying jobs and innovation, driving economic growth. Students trained in vocational subjects can fill essential roles in industries such as healthcare, construction, and manufacturing. By focusing on these areas, education systems can better meet the demands of the modern economy and provide students with clear pathways to stable employment. Critics argue that this pragmatic approach to education is more beneficial for both individuals and society as a whole.

In conclusion, the debate over the importance of foreign language learning versus vocational and technological education reflects broader questions about the goals of education. While foreign language skills offer cognitive, cultural, and professional benefits, there is also a strong case for prioritizing practical subjects that directly enhance employability and economic growth. Ultimately, the most effective educational approach may be one that balances both perspectives, integrating language learning with vocational training to equip students with a diverse skill set for the future.

Task 9.5
Answer the questions
based on the passage.

1. What are some cognitive benefits of learning a foreign language?

2. How does learning a new language foster empathy and global awareness in children? Form your answer by giving an example.

3. What practical subjects do critics believe should be prioritized over foreign language education?

4. How can proficiency in technology-related fields benefit students in terms of job opportunities?

5. What is the suggested approach to education that balances both perspectives on foreign language learning and vocational training?

6. Which side do you think the writer supports more? Why do you say so?

7. In your opinion, which side do you support more? Why do you say so?

TASK 9.7
Read the text carefully. Then, respond to the following prompt in 150–200 words. Use evidence or examples from the text and your own reasoning to support your answer.

Prompt:

The article presents arguments both for and against prioritizing foreign language learning in schools. If you were asked to redesign your school's curriculum, how would you balance foreign language education and vocational/technology-based subjects? Should one be given more importance than the other? Why?

In your response, consider:

- The long-term vs. short-term benefits of each option
- The needs of students in your country or community
- What makes education truly valuable in the 21st century

Are Zoos a Good Thing?

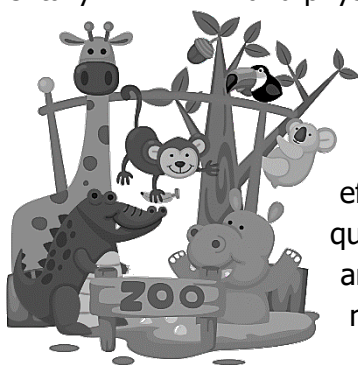

The debate over whether zoos are beneficial or harmful is complex and multifaceted. On one hand, zoos serve as important centres for wildlife conservation, education, and research. On the other hand, critics argue that zoos can compromise animal welfare and that animals are best left in their natural habitats. This discussion will explore the arguments for and against zoos, considering their role in conservation, education, and animal welfare.

Supporters of zoos argue that they play a crucial role in wildlife conservation. Many zoos participate in breeding programs for endangered species, helping to increase population numbers and preserve genetic diversity. These efforts can be vital for species that are threatened by habitat loss, poaching, and other human activities. Additionally, zoos often provide a safe haven for animals that cannot survive in the wild due to injury or other reasons.

Through these conservation efforts, zoos contribute to the protection and preservation of global biodiversity.

Moreover, zoos serve an educational purpose by raising awareness about wildlife and the importance of conservation. They provide visitors with the opportunity to learn about animals from different parts of the world, fostering a sense of empathy and a desire to protect these creatures. Educational programs and exhibits can inspire future generations to become involved in conservation efforts. Zoos also support scientific research by providing opportunities to study animal behaviour, genetics, and health in a controlled environment. This research can lead to important discoveries that benefit both animals in captivity and those in the wild.

However, critics argue that zoos often fail to meet the complex physical and psychological needs of animals. Captive animals may suffer from stress, boredom, and confinement, leading to abnormal behaviours and health problems. Many enclosures are too small and lack the environmental enrichment necessary to keep animals mentally and physically stimulated. Critics also point out that zoos sometimes prioritize popular or charismatic species over those that are less appealing but equally in need of conservation efforts. These concerns raise ethical questions about the treatment of animals in zoos and whether their needs can truly be met in captivity.

Furthermore, some argue that the conservation and educational benefits of zoos do not justify keeping animals in captivity. They believe that efforts should instead focus on protecting natural habitats and addressing the root causes of species decline, such as deforestation, climate change, and illegal wildlife trade. By supporting in-situ conservation projects, resources can be directed towards preserving ecosystems and allowing animals to thrive in their natural environments. Additionally, modern technology offers alternative ways to educate and engage the public about wildlife without the need for live animal displays, such as virtual reality experiences and documentary films.

In conclusion, the debate over whether zoos are a good thing involves weighing their contributions to conservation, education, and research against the ethical concerns related to animal welfare. While zoos can provide important benefits, it is essential to continually assess and improve their practices to ensure that the needs of the animals are met. Ultimately, a balanced approach that combines both in-situ and ex-situ conservation efforts may offer the best solution for protecting wildlife and promoting biodiversity.

GRAMMAR
SECTION
SENTENCES

Conditional sentences are an essential part of grammar that helps us talk about imaginary situations and their possible results. They allow us to discuss what could happen if certain conditions are not met. These sentences use different verb forms and auxiliary verbs to show how likely something is to happen. By using conditional sentences, we can imagine different scenarios, make predictions, express wishes, or talk about things that might not be real. They are important for communicating ideas clearly, whether we're speaking or writing.

Type	Usage	Condition Clause (If-clause)	Result Clause	Example
Type 0	General truths, scientific facts	Present Simple	Present Simple	If you heat ice, it melts.
Type 1	Real and possible situations in the future	Present Simple	Will + base form of the verb	If it rains tomorrow, we will cancel the picnic.
Type 2	Hypothetical or unlikely situations	Past Simple	Would + base form of the verb	If I had a million dollars, I would travel.
Type 3	Hypothetical situations in the past	Past Perfect	Would have + past participle	If I had known, I would have attended.

Task 9.10
Complete the sentences by using the provided verb. Use conditional type 0 or type 1.

1. If I see him, I _____ (give) him a lift.
2. The table will break if you _____ (sit) on it.
3. If he _____ (read) in bad light, he will ruin his eyes.
4. Someone _____ (steal) your car if you leave it unlocked.
5. What will happen if my parachute _____ (not open)?
6. If you _____ (not go) away, I'll call the police.
7. She will be absolutely furious if she _____ (hear) about this.
8. He'll be late for the train if he _____ (not start) at once.
9. If you come late, they _____ (not let) you in.
10. If he _____ (go) on telling lies, nobody will believe a word he says.
11. Unless he _____ (sell) more, he won't get much commission.
12. Ice _____ (turn) to water if you heat it.
13. If you _____ (not like) this one, I'll bring you another.

14. If I tell you a secret, _____ you _____ (promise) not to tell it to anyone else?
15. If you _____ (not believe) what I say, ask your mother.
16. Unless I have a quiet room, I _____ (not be able) to do any work.
17. She won't open the door unless she _____ (know) who it is.
18. Should you require anything else, please _____ (ring) the bell for the attendant.
